THE PITTSBURG SHOW.

Makes a Record in Attendance and Number of Birds.

The annual exhibition of the Pittsburg Fanciers' Club held last week in the "Smoky City," proved to be artistically, financially, and socially the greatest one ever held. The attendance was very large, and especially so on Washington's Birthday, when the Old City Hall showroom was packed with interested visitors. The management was, of course, excellent, being in excellent hands. Judging was promptly completed on Tuesday, all awards being up the following morning.

Theodore Hewes judged the Plymouth Rocks, W. C. Pierce the Wyandottes, Geo. N. Burgott the Leghorns and Minorcas, and J. H. Drevenstedt all other varieties except Exhibition Games, which were handled by W. J. Stanton. George Erbe judged the pigeons.

PLYMOUTH ROCKS.

Barred Rocks—Not alone the largest, but by far the best class shown at Pittsburg to date. There were over 200 birds in the single entry, and eleven breeding pens. In cockerels Pittsburg undoubtedly surpassed in number any exhibition held during the season of 1905, and so far as we know holds the world's record, there being eighty-seven birds in this class, and equality in keeping with the quantity. There were less than one-half point between first and fifth prize birds, and at least fifteen more in the class following close to the winners. In cocks the first, second and third birds were ahead of their class. In hens, first and second showed the equality, while in pullets third full specimen was decidedly the best in color and shape, but was too much under weight to land higher. Pens, first and second, in a class by themselves. Buffs, the best show out to date, strong from cocks to pullets, with three of the best pens we have handled this year. First and second cockerels, buff from head to tail and of good shape. Three elegant hens, four grand cocks, and three pullets so near alike that there was only a shade between them.

Whites—It was a large class; quality showed all through. First and second cocks, first, second and third cockerels, first and second pullets, the four winning hens, and first and second pens, the best in class. First hen was awarded the color special for whitest bird in the house.

THEO. HEWES.

WYANDOTTES.

Whites—A very large class and competition was keen, the best class we have ever seen at Pittsburg, with as fine a class of cocks as we have ever seen in many a day. First cock, a wonder in shape and color, was also winner of special for the best bird in show. First cockerel was of a very fine Wyandotte type and fine color. First hens and pullets were of the highest order, both grand in shape and color. Pens made up a very hot class, and lots of them. The other winners were close up to the first birds, and all of the winners could have been taken out and a fine class would have been left.

Silvers—Not a large class, but the best in quality ever shown at Pittsburg. First cock and first cockerel were good enough to win anywhere. Buffs not quite as good in quality or numbers as in former years, but some good birds were shown, especially first and second hen.

Partridge—The best class of this variety we have handled this year. First and second cocks were great specimens, the first a wonder in shape. First hen was very fine in shape and grand in color, with the second not far behind. All of the pullets were the best penciled class we ever saw taken as a whole, and more birds changed hands in this class than ever before in a single class of this variety, which goes to show the popularity of this breed.

Silver Penciled—Also a fine class. Some noted winners were shown in this class.

Golden Wyandottes were another warm bunch. First cock and first pullet were very choice specimens, both in shape and color. Many other notable birds were in this class, but space will not permit mentioning all of the choice specimens displayed at this show.

The Blacks were not a large class, but the first and second cock birds were grand specimens and compared favorably in shape with the best to be found in the other varieties.

W. C. PIERCE.

ASIATICS.

Light Brahmas were a surprise in numbers and quality, the first cock being an exceptionally fine specimen in color and shape. Three very strong cockerels in winners of first, second and third make one feel as if this grand old variety is again being appreciated at its real value, and that is at the head of the list of standard bred poultry. The second cockerel, when fully developed in size and shape, should prove a winner in any company, his hackle penciling, being beautiful, with sound, black tail, and splendid primaries. Winners in hens and pullets- considerably above the average.

Langshans few but good. Cochins did not show up as well as expected.

HAMBURGS.

Take it as a whole, the Hamburg family was more completely and thoroughly represented at Pittsburg than ever before, and ranked with the Boston and New York exhibits in quality. Notably fine was the first cockerel in the Silver Spangled variety, a bird very pure in color, with clear, well-defined spangles, fine style, good head points, one of the most attractive specimens we have handled. Hens and pullets in this variety were very fine in quality.

Golden Penciled, a grand lot, notably first and second hens, and first and second pullets, exquisite barring and color predominating. Some clearly penciled and excellent Silver Penciled were shown. Black Hamburgs fully up to the high standard of the others.

BLACK SPANISH AND ANDALUSIANS.

Only a few Spanish, but good ones, were shown. Andalusians quite strong classes, coming females, especially strong in color and lacing.

POLISH.

ORPINGTONS.

Strong classes, Buffs being well represented, and of fine quality; Blacks exceptionally good, being of large size and strong in color; Jubilees few, but high class.

TURKEYS, DUCKS, AND GEESE.

A fine but small lot of Bronze Turkeys, and a strong and high-grade lot of Pekin ducks were shown.

J. H. D.

BANTAMS.

Pittsburg had another of the large eastern shows where a win in the bantam alley is a very coveted prize. Cochin and Sebright Bantams here were equal to and show for quality and number. In Buff Cochins there were a number of specimens worthy of special mention. The winning cock was also the winner at St. Louis, Boston and elsewhere. Black and White Cochins, good in quality, but not so large in numbers as the Buffs.

Sebrights were represented by a goodly lot throughout, especially the winning Golden hens. Silvers contained a good pullet and cock with the much desired narrow lacing.

Game Bantams, while not large in number, were represented by a number of Black, Red, Pyle and Birchens that were a credit to the breed. A number of very fair Rose Comb Blacks were also in line to be admired by the large crowds in attendance.

Piedmont Poultry Show.

The South is fast coming to the front in poultry culture, and in no section of this country is the industry growing faster than in North Carolina. About ten years ago the writer assisted in pulling off the first poultry show ever held in the State. Today there are five live poultry associations here, and hundreds of progressive poultrymen, who have as good stock as you will find anywhere.

The show held at Lexington, N. C., December 13-16, 1904, was, perhaps, the largest held in the State this season, and was a success except in point of attendance. The people do not give the support to the cause they should. They are backward in realizing that the poultry industry is one of the largest in this country. They seem to think the hen business is too small a thing to attract their attention, but then they must be educated, and the best way to do this is to hold shows, and induce the people to attend by having an attractive exhibition.

A Brown Leghorn Matter.

On page 163 of February issue of the American Poultry Journal, under the head of "What Wm. Ellery Bright is Doing," appears a notice of the sale of Bright's first prize St. Louis Brown Leghorn pullet at $100, and further it is inferred that she went to "old and well known breeders, which not only pleased them, but has won prizes for them." Now the winning of prizes may mean anything from first to say sixth or seventh prize, and it may interest Mr. Bright and others to learn just what place or prize this pullet won after leaving his hands. The first prize St. Louis pullet was bought by a Mr. Gable from Mr. Bright, and later bought from Gable by Exmoor Farms, Lebanon, Pa. This pullet was shown by Exmoor Farms at the Madison Square Garden Show under my name, and Exmoor Farm's seventh St. Louis pullet was shown at the same time under the name of a Mr. Stunk. Mr. Stunk won first with our seventh St. Louis pullet, while Bright's first St. Louis pullet was placed fourth.

In the November Reliable Poultry Journal, Judge Burgott said, in his report on classes judged at St. Louis, that the first prize St. Louis Brown Leghorn pullet was "the finest he ever laid his hands on." This being true is it not reasonable to assume that our seventh St. Louis pullet, which in New York won first, defeating Bright's first St. Louis Pullet by three places, must be the best pullet that Judge Burgott ever laid his hands on? He should know as he judged Leghorns at both shows.

These are facts. Weigh them and remember that both the first prize St. Louis pullet and the first prize New York pullet are now at Exmoor Farms, both of them being the finest pullets ever raised, only one is the finer by three points.

C. A. Dutton,
Supt. Exmoor Farms,
Lebanon, Pa.

Egg Breaking Hens.

It is usually the hens that are fed with kitchen waste that break and eat their eggs. Fowls that are given a sufficient quantity of corn, wheat, scalded bran, and meal, do not seem to contract this bad habit, but feeding with meat or animal meal frequently causes it. Unfortunately, once the habit has been formed, there seems to be no cure. Other causes conducive to the egg-breaking habit are giving egg shells to the fowls, confining the hens too closely in the houses and yards, and leaving the eggs in the nests to freeze, which break and are eaten.

Boyer's Talk

Squab broilers must not exceed three-quarters of a pound, dressed weight.

Spring chickens run between two and four pounds each, dressed.

Roasting or stewing fowls are four or more pounds in weight, dressed.

As a rule the early broiler does not exceed one-and-a-quarter pounds in weight; an April bird weighs a half pound heavier; and by May the dressed weight has reached two pounds.

February, March and April are the best broiler months in the East, and March to July in the West.

April, May and June is the spring chicken season.

The squab broiler market is January and February, as that is the season for scarcity of quail.

The growth of the squab pigeon industry has crippled the squab broiler trade.

The roasting fowl season is generally the heaviest during the Jewish holidays in May, and also directly before and after the Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Year's days.

The Wyandotte is conceded to be the best broiler-producing breed, although the Rhode Island Reds and Plymouth Rocks are also considerably used.

The Plymouth Rock is better fitted for the small roasting fowl class, than it is for broiler purposes, while the light Brahma fills the bill for a large roasting fowl.

The present tendency is to grow a large size on the White Wyandotte; in fact, breeders have learned that large stock is each year more in demand. This may eventually crowd the Plymouth Rocks. There should be a distinction between the two breeds, as we need both varieties in commercial poultry.

The Orpingtons, which are making a strong impression upon our poultry farmers, are likely to enter sharp competition with our American varieties for roasting fowl honors.

Caponizing never did get a good hold in market poultry. Our American poultry markets have been sufficiently encouraging for the ordinary prime roaster, as the buying public would not pay an advance of any great amount for a capon.

Experts in caponizing are comparatively few, and unless a man is more or less expert in the art, the losses are too great.

Yarded poultry is always more tender than that which is given free range. This fact has caused a greater demand for poultry from the poulterer than from the farmer.

One of the greatest secrets in the production of market poultry is to produce in the best style just what the public wants, regardless of our own prejudices.

English and French epicures tell us that the Dorkings, Houdans, and Langshans are the finest table poultry, and we admit that we never ate a roaster that we enjoyed better than the Langshan, but our American markets demand a yellow-skinned carcass, and it is foolish to try to educate them to white-skinned birds.

Running a market poultry farm with dunghills is about as "smart" a trick as operating a factory with incompetent labor. Dunghills will in many cases give us the desired weights, but there is no uniformity of carcasses, and it requires a longer time and a greater cost to reach the desired end.

Big comb cockerels are not attractive broilers, and are often taken for small old birds. For that reason the Leghorn would not be desirable, although the latter has an ideal body.

Leghorn pullets make attractive broilers, but they are slower in reaching the desired weight, and consequently cost too much in time and feed.

When hens cease to lay and break down from excessive fat, they make salable roasting fowls in many markets.

The item is current that the Armour chicken plant, at Davenport, Iowa, has a contract with a firm at Liverpool, England, for furnishing 500,000 pounds of dressed chickens.

James Rankin says the cost per pound to raise broilers is about 10 to 12 cents, and for roasters 7 to 8 cents.

During the spring and summer months the roaster commands a better price per pound than does the broiler.

In order to secure the best prices, both broilers and roasters must be gotten out at a season when eggs are both scarce and high, and when the standard of fertility is as a rule very low.

Nitrogenous foods must be given the growing stock to develop bone, muscle and feather, but when getting them ready for market carbonaceous food must be given.

"Eternal vigilance is the price of chickens."

A Maine poultryman scalds his poultry before picking. He heats water to 130 degrees. On a small oil stove he sets a large pail of water that has been heated on the kitchen range, and in this pail has a floating dairy thermometer, so that he may keep the temperature steady at 130 degrees. He kills the chickens by cutting off the neck bone just back of the head, but not the skin. After the bird has bled, he souses it up and down a few times in the hot water. If the feathers on the thigh pick easily, he hangs up the carcass against a board or wall, so it will not swing, and strips off the feathers. He claims that if care is taken in having the water just right, the skin will not tear, and the carcass will look cleaner and plumper than when dry picked.

When shipping dressed poultry to market, pack closely in a box lined with clean white paper. Never use straw in packing. Before packing in the box be sure that the carcass is thoroughly chilled.

The Egg Business.

Egg production should be the foundation of every poultry plant.

To make egg farming profitable it is necessary to harbor no drones in the flock, and to each year breed only from the best layers.

We can not make an intelligent selection of our best layers unless we use trap nests, and let it be known that the trap nest is one of the noblest inventions of the modern poultryman.

The trap nest is of the same value to the egg farmer that the incubator and brooder is to the market poultry producer.

In estimating the number of trap nests needed for a flock of hens, count one nest for every three or four hens, and you will average about right.

An objection raised by some poultrymen to the use of trap nests is that they can not afford the time to look after them. After a number of years' experience in their use we find that we can not afford to do without them. It requires but a few minutes every hour to look after them, and as by their use we are able to get rid of the unprofitable birds, and have the same results with a less number of hens, we save considerably in feed, which more than offsets the time spent in looking after these devices.

We have often heard of selling "the goose that laid the golden egg." Where a poultryman has a flock of fowls and does not use a trap nest, he is very apt to sell out of that flock the hen that is doing the best laying, and retaining one that is not giving enough eggs to pay for her board.

A retail egg trade is the best, and especially if that trade is among a good class of customers in a nearby city, who are always glad to pay a few cents a dozen more for fresh eggs when they know that the article is as represented. But great care must be taken in delivering these eggs, for one bad egg in the lot may lose a valuable customer.

The heavy layer is likewise a heavy eater and a heavy drinker, and the supply of pure fresh water must be constantly before them. It will be noticed that almost immediately after leaving the nest the hen visits the drinking fountain. See that the supply is never run out.

It is much harder to overfatten a laying hen than one not laying. And as a laying hen must have a certain amount of food to build up wasting tissues, or in other words, feed the body, there must be a surplus to manufacture the egg. This does not mean over feeding, but enough more than ordinarily to meet all demands.

The nest egg is not the important factor in egg production that has been credited to it for ages. It does not induce egg production, but is merely a guide to the young hen in locating a nest. In starting a flock of pullets or new hens, the nest egg will be useful in teaching them to lay in certain places, but aside from that we know of no benefit.

SATURDAY, MARCH 4, 1905.

March 4th, 1905, is historical in more ways than one. It is the inauguration day of the President of this glorious American Union—the home of liberty and standard fowls, the center of the universe and everything that's good. Every loyal American feels fond of the day and welcomes his President with open arms and a gladdened heart. Not only is this the inauguration day of the President, but it is truly the inauguration of The American Fancier into its new home at the seat of government—the Nation's Capital. This is as it should be, and the great American weekly will hereafter be published in its Washington home as the true exponent of the vast industries it represents.

The management's efforts to improve the paper will be untiring. Each little detail will be carefully looked after with a view of making it the true representative of the industry, and no pains will be spared in gathering the news of the world which concerns every phase of the subject. There will be no other set policy than that of which we write. Progress will be the watchword and justice the motto. That which is of interest to all classes and all sections will be of the same interest to us; we have no interest in anything connected with the poultry business save that of publishing clean, unbiased, and unprejudiced poultry publications for the edification of the masses. Such is our aim, and if we fall short of this, there will be no one to blame but ourselves. Therefore, every indication points to the fulfillment of our ideas for a live, progressive, and fearless weekly newspaper in poultry and pigeon topics. It is time now to be happy.

The editorial staff is known to everyone who is in any way connected either directly or indirectly with the poultry and pigeon industries. They have been selected for their known fitness for handling the subjects intrusted to their care, and we do not hesitate in commending them to our readers. Their names and their positions are the only recommendations we have to offer in their behalf. There is one thing that is most earnestly desired by the editorial staff, and that is cooperation. The invitation is extended to all to join in making The American Fancier the pride of this great republic. 'Tis a simple proposition, dear readers, and we already hear you unanimously pledging your support to the new enterprise which concerns us all. This unanimity of opinion seems general and success seems assured.

The agitator is a very dangerous companion for men who have pride in the company they keep.

The fellow who has whipped everybody else to a standstill in the show room will eventually meet his Waterloo when least expected.

These "rather warm discussions" mentioned in Mr. Orr's communications are likely to be "red hot" ones before peace is declared, unless something is doing.

Elesewhere in the issue of The American Fancier is published a communication from Mr. T. E. Orr, Secretary of the American Poultry Association. This communication comes in the nature of a "pacifier," and will prove a revelation to many of our readers. It is not our purpose to antagonize the workings of our parent organization, but rather to assist in getting the tangle straightened out. There is evidently an appearance at juggling with the affairs of this Association, and if we are to continue at the same rate, it seems to us we had better drop the whole business, and place the work in more competent hands. Now we may well count on another serious delay for the much talked about and greatly sought after New Standard of Perfection.

Oh, patience thou art a jewel indeed! These two gentlemen of the committee of five who objected to publishing the Standard of the American Reds, as adopted at the Minneapolis meeting, were Messrs. Drevenstedt and Curtis. Naturally they objected, because they did not know of the Standard for the American Reds, and we are of opinion that some others who were present could not repeat a clause of the alleged Standard. The whole affair seems but a bid for more time, or at least an attempt to hunt cover on the delayed Standard, which was absolutely promised in March. If one is to judge from the information in hand, it will be impossible to issue the book in three months from March. Barely a fifth of the book is in type, the illustrations are not completed, another hold up for the special meeting on April 4th, and a dozen and one delays not mentioned prompts us in our announcement as above. It is a highly complicated state of affairs to be in, and we are at a loss just what to think is the true condition of the situation, yet we are patient, oh, so patient. Never mind, dear people, do your very best with your birds, and next season allowances will be made for the shortcomings of some people whom we know.

No one sentence was ever written so many times as, "Does poultry pay?" Of course it pays, for the world couldn't keep on playing a losing game.

There is just one crank on earth that could never be turned, and that is the hen crank.

A giddy goose would lead one to believe they were worse than a giddy fool.

The first of our series of portraits in our "Gallery of Fame" is that of our old friend and associate, Mr. John L. Cost. The artist's work is fully appreciated by all who know Mr. Cost, and we can assure our readers that we have many more of these masterpieces awaiting publication. One such as this will be published in each issue of The American Fancier and The Feather, and our readers are assured of genuine treats each week. Don't miss them.

Everybody is an Indian more than once in the poultry business—it is the same old law of nature that once an Indian always an Indian in the chicken business.

Associate Editor Brown has grown poetical indeed. In a letter recently received from him we quote a few lines which we think will set us all thinking of our verses. Listen: "Spring will soon be in winter's lap; and the hens and pullets are already singing spring ditties; their combs are getting the egg laying color; the males are assisting the hens in nest making, and some of them are actually going on the nests, coaxing the hens to lay. The sun is getting that 80,000 miles spot around on the other side and letting us have more genial rays. An owl came last night and insisted on getting in my corn crib, so I opened a little side door so he could get a comfortable night's lodging and a nice supper. Am bringing in both overcoat pockets filled with eggs three or four times a day, and there are many other spring indications that plainly tell that sitting by the fireside days are soon to end."

Arrangements are fast being made for a show at Washington next December. There is no just reason why there should not be a show held at the National Capital, and we feel gratified indeed to be in a position to be able to make this announcement. Complete details will be mentioned later.

When conditions arise that make life a burden, work a chore without recompense, and existence takes the place of living. The average human biped, if he is a man, migrates. He seeks "other fields and pastures new." He is right by divine call and equity.

Not so with another body known as the Amrican Poultry Association. Its existence is living; its hardships are none. Yet it migrates, and for no sane or logical reason.

Why?

Thereby hangs a tale.

To relate it would take pages, so we condense the facts, and our readers can draw their own conclusions.

The American Poultry Association is composed of hundreds of good poultrymen. Its life membership represents many of America's best fanciers. Its annual membership represents a lot of good fellows, that on the spur of the enthusiastic apex or an isoceles triangle cough up the necessary one or two dollars to be in the swim.

Ever since the pennywise and pound foolish Shannon amendmet passed at the Charleston meeting became a law, the annual members became a power and the life members a bunch of punctured tires. The four-time secretary of the American Poultry Association was the father of the Shannon amendment. That is why he is the "big four."

The annuals are the hope and salvation of the men that believe in the migratory stunts of the old society.

An association with something like a thousand members that can muster only a corporal's guard at an annual meeting held at Minneapolis or any other place geographically and financially unreachable by hundreds of members without great expense, must realize that it is treading on the quicksands of progress.

The poultry business and fancy is too great, too important to be left in the hands of a migrating coterie of a self-adulating bunch of office seekers. The American Poultry Association must have a permanent home with a secretary ready to answer all calls promptly, surely, and unreservedly.

It should cease migrating and stay at home.

The tag of the A. P. A. as applied at St. Louis and other shows should be forever banished. The annual meetings in connection with near or distant shows should be abolished.

What the America fancy wants is a solid organiation that protects its interests. The only way to do that is to incorporate the old society, furnish it a home, and once a year let there be a gathering of its members or delegates in the rosy month of June, at some accepted place, that will result in a crystallization of thought and determination to place the poultry business as well as the American Poultry Association second to no other allied industries or bodies in America.

Stop migrating.

Being possessed with the knowledege that you are right is a gratification beyond limit.

Some men's ideas are like the cackling of a barren hen; they bear no fruit.

The new volume of The American Fancier is published on Inauguration Day, March 4. It was prospected and its title head designed on Independence Day, July 4, 1893. The writer of these notes was present and a very much interested party on both memorable occasions. The eagle being a truly and emblematical American bird perched on the pennant nearly twelve years ago, and is now more firmly intrenched on a much stronger and powerful perch.

An informal meeting of seven members of the executive committee of the American Poultry Association was held Wednesday morning, Feb. 22, at the Hotel Grand, Pittsburg, for the purpose of discussing the action taken at the Minneapolis meeting of the above mentioned society, regarding the admission of American Reds to the Standard. Mr. Theo. Hewes presided, Mr. Grant M. Curtis acted as secretary. Others present were Messrs. A. F. Cooper, Julius Frank, George H. Burgott, W. C. Pierce and H. Drevenstedt. A resolution was framed and sent to parties interested. The meeting was unanimous in its desire to right what hundreds of fanciers and members believe to have been all wrong.

The Albany (N. Y.) Show held this month promises to be a fine one. Premiums are liberal and especially the specials. The secretary, Allan F. Hill, Jr., Albany, N. Y., will be pleased to send the premium list to our readers who intend exhibiting.

The first show of the season will be held at Celoron, N. Y., in the handsome Auditorium located in the park of the famous Chatauqua summer resort, June 20, to 24, under the auspices of the Western New York Fanciers' Association. The exhibition held last year during the same month proved to be a great success, and we believe the time is near at hand when shows will be h eld every month in the year. The atractions at Celoron are inducements alone to exhibitors and fanciers to take a week's vacation and enjoy the cool breezes of Lake Chatauqua. Dr. J. W. Morris, Jamestown, N. Y., is the secretary, and will be glad to supply further particulars.

There is no truth in the rumor that White Brahmas will be admitted to the Standard under the name "Chinese Whites" by the American Poultry Association.

B. J. Hill, formerly manager of Orchard Hill Poultry Farm, Sewickley, Pa., has accepted a similar position with Beaver Hill Poultry Farm, Beaver, Pa., the property of Mr. T. E. Orr, secretary of the American Poultry Association.

The Pittsburg Show was a winner in every sense of the word. Everybody seemed to be satisfied with everybody else, and even a couple of real genuine Smoky City cloudy days, "when it gets dark before daylight," did not detract from the good fanciers' feeling prevalent.

The Hon. J. P. Hilldorfer entertained a party of fanciers, officers and judges at a dinner given in the dining hall of Hotel Antler on Washington's Birthday, which proved a most enjoyable occasion. It is at this excellent hotel the special meeting of the American Poultry Association will be held.

Placing incompetent judes on varieties because they are specialists, so-called, and really offer their services in many instances for "glory" only, is creating a decided feeling among exhibitors at the larger shows. These men are often hired because they are cheap, and the big shows have as an excuse the fact that it takes from ten to twenty-five men to judge a show in one day. This is not sound logic. Six competent men can judge a big show in one day, where twenty incompetents struggle along for several days or more.

An expert judge must be quick in his work. The man who hesitates is liable to get rattled when the classes are heavy. Take the older judges and note what is required of them at fall shows. They must handle and judge frequently from 1,500 to 2,000 birds alone, or possibly with one additional judge to help him out. At the Hagerstown Show seven men are employed each year to judge, and awards as a rule made in one day and a half. Hagerstown is a hard show to judge, it being the largest of its kind, with very keen competition.

When specialty judges flounder about and take two days to judge what can be handled in as many hours, there is something radically wrong. The sooner such performances are properly rehearsed before going on the stage the better for the performers.

We regret to learn that Mr. Richard Oke, the well known Canadian fancier and judge, has been confined to his bed the past three weeks with a severe attack of the grippe, but he will soon be able to get back in harness. Mr. Oke has been engaged as Editor of Canadian department of The American Fancier, and will give our readers the news of the doings of boys and girls across the border, at the poultry shows and at their yards.

We regret to learn that the "great and only Billy" McNeil, of London, Canada, has retired from the fancy. He made his last appearance in the show arena at the "Big Ontario Show." Mr. McNeil was the most successful showman in Canada and in the United States, his winnings at the World's Fair, St. Louis, alone netting him fourteen hundred dollars, while his sales were very large. But he always showed the finest of stock in the pink of condition. It was the hand of a master of his art that made his success so great. "Billy" McNeil will be missed by his many friends in the show room, for his was a kindly nature, and his witty sayings made the evening sessions at the "Canadian headquarters" very enjoyable.

There are two Western Connecticut Poultry Associations in the field this season; one at Winsted, the other at Danbury. The dates of the former's show are December 19 to 22, and of the latter November 29 to December 2. The Danbury show has become a fixture, and the name of the association would hardly affect it, but we think there should be some understanding in the matter so as to avoid confusion.

Mr. J. H. Sautee has severed his connection with the Greystone Poultry Farm, Yonkers, N. Y., and is located on his own farm at Campville, Tioga Co., N. Y., giving his whole time and attention to the poultry business. He has several choice matings of his favorites, Black Minorcas and White Plymouth Rocks, and will sell but a very limited number of eggs, as he will use nearly all for hatching so as to have a large supply of young stock on hand next fall and winter.

Elm Poultry Yards, of Hartford, Conn., closed a most successful season at the Boston Show, making a record with the first White Wyandotte pullet never equalled, viz: Winner of $100.00 championship cup best white female any age, Ivory Soap special for whitest bird in entire exhibit, any age or variety; also Spratt's Gold Special for best Wyandotte, any variety. We handled this bird and believe her to be best White Wyandotte pullet we have yet seen.

Theodore Hewes, in the Inland Poultry Journal, speaks in the following complimentary manner of the combination of The Feather and The American Fancier.

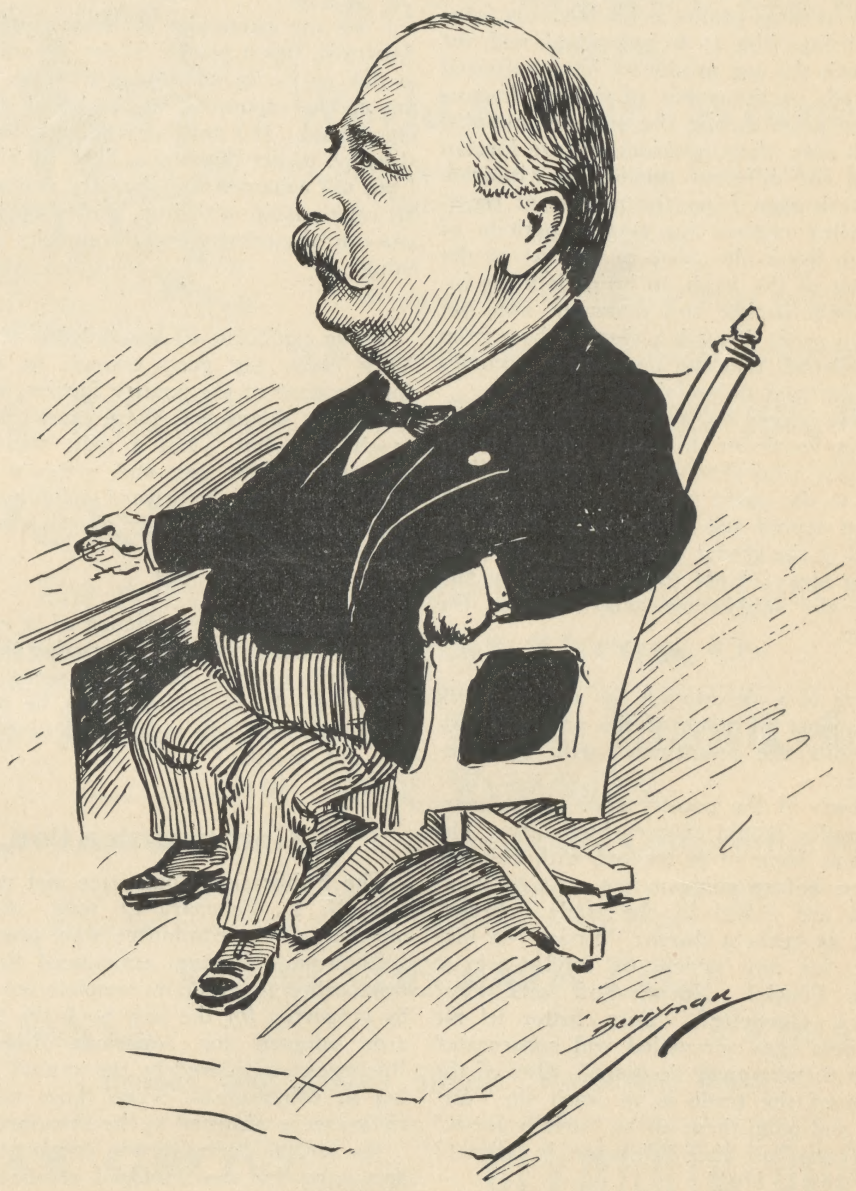
"We may now look for the best weekly poultry paper the world has ever seen. We know the men who are associated with this combination; we know their ability, and from a strictly fanciers standpoint they have no superiors in this country or abroad. The subscription price will remain the same as it has been since The Fancier was founded—$1.00 per year in advance; through a clubbing combination the two papers—The American Fancier, weekly, and The Inland Poultry Journal —can be furnished for the price of The American Fancier, both one year for $1.00.



"Remember, The Fancier is the only paper in America that publishes the complete list of awards of all shows, and now with their immense presses and one of the best equipped printing plants in America, every number will be mailed promptly on time, and will reach all the Middle and Eastern States Saturday night, making it a Sunday paper for more than 10,000 fanciers."

JOHN L. COST.

Fifteen years ago the Hagerstown show was a county fair, and its poultry exhibits on par with functions of the latter kind; today it is the great Hagerstown Fair with the largest and most famous poultry and pigeon show held in the fall in the United States. The wizard that accomplished all this is rare old John L. Cost, superintendent of poultry, as well as director for many years. By sheer force of his strong personality, unflinching integrity, added to his unbounded good nature and hospitality he has attracted to Hagerstown many of America's leading fanciers. The famous parades and banquets are never-to-be-forgotten memories by those who have been fortunate enough to attend them. The crowning event of the year 1905 in chicken annals will be the Golden Jubilee of the Hagerstown Fair, in commemoration of the half century of its existence. It will be "All aboard for Hagerstown" next October.

I wish to say a few words anent the condemnation of storage eggs and their manipulation by the people who handle them.

Since the advent of the storage system the price of eggs has been more uniform throughout the year, therefor more satisfactory. It is the continual changing of values that demoralizes trade.

Taken from the market at a time when eggs formerly went as low as six and eight cents a dozen in the Southwest, they are released during the winter months when, without them to fall back upon, the very poor would have to cut eggs from the bill of fare.

It is a legitimate business, one which any citizen is free to engage in, and entitled to as large profits as his business foresight brings him as an individual, and out of which the egg producers have garnered hundreds of thousands of dollars from a greater price during the summer months.

It is only when combinations are formed among the different packers to withdraw the fresh eggs from the market at trust-controlled centers for certain periods of time to boost the price of storage at the expense of the fresh, to intimidate the independent packer and undersell him, yet make a profit through a secret rebate from the railroad, that the transaction becomes irregular and unlawful.

There is only one remedy aside from the election booth for this evil, and that is for the party who produces the egg to sell as close to the party who eats it as possible. If you cannot sell to the party direct try to sell to the grocer or dairyman who does supply him. If not to the grocer try and reach the middleman who supplies the grocer.

"Much of the poultry sold in the markets today would stagger humanity. The chickens have to be treated with chloride of lime before going to pot. As to eggs! What are called in the trade "checks" bring 45 cents a dozen; "dirties"—a nice name for any article of food!—are 40 cents. Poach? Never. Soft boil? Fry? Shirr? Omelette? "Boss, better le' me hab dem eggs scrambled wid consecrated bacon to take away de taste." One of the tricks of the trade is to wash the "dirties" and palm them off as "strictly fresh." Who can tell the difference in winter? Egg trust? Ha!"

Regarding the egg, "Tip" says further: "Many times has Tip decreed that an egg should be a week old before eaten, yet here are sensible men wrangling over the question, certain holding that the perfection of egg is found only in that which is eaten a few minutes after the hen has done her day's work. The dinosaur who sports a tuzzimuzzy in his buttonhole should know better. Some philosophers eat eggs for the sulphur that is in them. The older they are the moresulphur. Li Hung Chang's favorite food was not humming birds' nests, but eggs of the Devonian age —all sulphur. An egg three thousand years old is supposed to prolong life. But there is always a happy medium; we cannot do better than have our eggs ten days old."

A word about price. The average producer holds he should receive a much higher price for his fresh and palatable goods, and so he should. The market price on his goods is all right, but the trouble is, these inhuman scoundrels who never have the better article, palm off their rotten old trash as fresh, and collect the price of fresh goods. He does not drag down the good fresh article to the level of his trash, but he elevates the trash to the higher level.

Now that my position as "go between," or rather the link in the chain uniting the producer and consumer, will soon be only a memory, it might not be out of place to say the many pounds of poultry I disposed of to my customers this past season, from American Fancier readers, has been a revelation to me, especially the small percentage familiar with fresh killed poultry before I was enabled to place such within their reach. Their words of heartfelt praise will be one of the most pleasant remembrances I shall carry away with me.

I see my namesake at Wentworthville, Australia, has a pen of Silver Wyandottes in this year's laying contest that are keeping up the reputation of the breed, standing second. If I am lucky enough, as time slips by, to get together a flock of Silvers, I am not ashamed if I shall try and scrape up relationship with him, and swap him a pen out of curiosity and the novelty of the thing.

Those criticisms of the judging at New York show are good enough to repeat for the good of the poultry fancier, and of the shows themselves there cannot be too much said, but when a man stands up squarely on both feet and writes a plain, manly and straightforward opinion on so important a subject, why did he not sign his own name?

In relating the experience of a certain type of cross-bred fowls in getting into the Standard, a writer quotes the secretary of the A. P. A. as advising they be pushed until distinct. You mean until extinct, do you not, brother?

A Communication.

The Publication Committee met at Buffalo, N. Y., February 13, 1905. All five members of the committee were present.

Chairman Kimmey announced that we were called together to complete our work by preparing for the new book the Standards adopted for American Reds and Buckeyes, as ordered by the annual meeting at Minneapolis, when those two varieties were admitted to the Standard.

No serious difficulty was encountered in arranging for the Standard of the Buckeyes.

On taking up the American Reds it was found that the two members of the committee who did not attend the Minneapolis meeting were unalterably opposed to publishing the Standard adopted at Minneapolis for this variety. One insisted that this Standard, differing in shape, color and weight-points from that adopted at Rochester for Single Comb Rhode Island Reds, would shut out the Rose Comb Rhode Island Reds, which he claimed we had no right to do. The other member insisted that the admission of the American Reds at Minneapolis was illegal, and that this committee must not publish this Standard until the whole matter has been reconsidered by a special meeting of the association, to be called for that purpose.

At this time there was placed in the hands of the president of the American Poultry Association, who is also a member of this Publication Committee, the following petition:

Mr. D. Lincoln Orr,
President of the American Poultry Association:

We, the undersigned members of the Executive Committee, do hereby petition you, under Article 1, Section 1, of the by-laws, to have a special meeting of the association called at your convenience, to reconsider the action of the association in admitting, at the meeting at Minneapolis, Minn., birds to the America Standard of Excellence under the name of American Reds.

(Signed) Arthur R. Sharp,
A. E. Felch,
Lester Tompkins,
Grant M. Curtis,
C. H. Latham.

The president expressed great regret that this action should be taken at this time. He said that the responsibility for thus delaying beyond March the issuing of the new Standard must be borne by those who refuse to allow the instructions of the Minneapolis meeting to be carried out, and by those who thus called this meeting; but he felt that he must comply with the provisions of the by-laws and call said meeting. He therefore instructed the secretary to call a special meeting of the American Poultry Association at Pittsburg, Pa., Tuesday morning, April 4, 1905, at a place to be hereafter arranged for by the secretary, who shall give thirty days' notice thereof by mail to members of the association.

Some rather warm discussions were indulged in upon the matter in hand, but the only action that could be agreed upon under the circumstances was to arrange the Standard for American Reds, adopted at Minneapolis, so that it shall be consistent with the other portions of the new Standard, and have it ready to present at the Pittsburg meeting. This was done.

From reports submitted, it was shown that the art work on the new Standard, for which we have been waiting, can be completed in about three weeks.

By order of the Publication Committee,
T. E. Orr,
Secretary.

Give a charred ear of corn to each breeding yard once a week.

Keep the roosts clean in winter as well as summer. Take them out and go over them with coal oil and a paint brush.

If you are about to start in the poultry business remember that it is wise to buy your stock or eggs from a reliable breeder, if you do pay a little more for them.

There is a limit to the cheapness of pure bred poultry, and when that limit is reached there is little quality left.

A man in Minnesota claims to be able to select the best layers, the medium layers, and those that will hardly produce any eggs. According to the results from three pens which he selected from a flock, as reported by a writer in a Western poultry journal, he guessed correctly. If this is a discovery and a fact, it will create a revolution, as well as a great revelation, in poultry raising.

Nothing so searching as the March winds. Cracks and crevices near the roosting fowls may start incipient roup. It is better to remedy the cause than to doctor the results. If no better material is at hand tack on two or three thicknesses of newspapers. They will stop the drafts and also add warmth to the houses.

Get ready this spring and set out some fruit trees for shade in the poultry yards. In a few years there will be two crops to gather in the poultry yards.

Red Rhode Island, Rhode Island Reds, or American Reds, it would seem, can masquerade as one and the same. It is either a distinction without a difference or a difference without any distinction. It is probably the combs that mixes the colors.

The "American Hen" has been credited by the Secretary of Agriculture as worthy of cackleation for about a $350,000,0000 annual revenue. Now will you get the hen fever and get a little share in this snug sum? G. O. B.

Editor of the American Fancier:

To the best of my knowledge and belief, all the prizes, specials and regulars, and all obligations of the Fanciers Poultry Association's Show, held at Newark, January 30 to February 4, 1905, have been paid, but I thought it might be well if you could give this fact some publicity so that if anything has escaped my notice this will give an opportunity of drawing my attention to the matter.

I am pleased to say that Newark Show turned out to be a success not only as to the quality of the birds and the attendance, but financially as well, and plans are now being laid for a larger and better show next season. It is estimated that seventy thousand (70,000) persons visited the show during the week, and sales were very large.

T. Farrer Rackham, Supt.

The first annual meeting of the new American Single Comb Brown Leghorn Club was held at the Coliseum, Chicago, January 25, 1905. A more complete set of officers was elected, and the new and more complete constitution adopted. Since its organization at St. Louis, October 29, 1904, the club has made a very healthy growth, and from the many applications received, not only from new applicants, but from those who were one time members of the old club, it is proof conclusive that their loyalty to the breed they represent is by no means lagging, and that they propose to be identified with and help to build up a club that shall be alive the year round.

The officers of the new Brown Leghorn Club are: President, Fred Mott Lansing; Eastern Vice-President, W. W. Harrington; Western Vice-President, J. A. Bailey; Northern Vice-President, H. C. Meatyard; Southern Vice-President, E. E. Carter; Central Vice-President, J. R. Hill; Secretary-Treasurer, C. A. Dutton, Pine Grove, Pa.

The International Bantam Breeders' Club met on January 27, at the Coliseum, during the Chicago Show. At this exhibition the club offered several silver cups and a large number of cash specials to members, both of which drew out a highly meritorious class of bantams. At the annual meeting of the club Mr. E. J. W. Dietz, Downers Grove, Ill., was elected president, and Frank W. Radford, Oshkosh, Wis., was elected secretary and treasurer. The next meeting of the club will be held with the Chicago Show during the last week in January, 1906.

The Sweeney Co., one of Buffalo's newest and largest department stores, had a Pet Stock Show for two weeks, opening January 23 and closing February 4. The show was held on the fifth floor of the company's store, and was a great success. The admission was free, the show being used as an advertisement. It drew the people to the store all right. The National Federation of Homing Pigeon Fanciers had a fine exhibit. They had a fly which attracted much attention, in which all the districts of Buffalo exhibited their birds.

The seventh annual meeting of the Rhode Island Red Club, of America, was held at the Boston Show, January 19, 1905. There were nearly one hundred members in attendance, and as usual a large amount of enthusiasm was manifested. All the 1904 officers were reelected by acclamation, with the exception of the vice-president from Kansas, Dr. J. Martin, whose resignation was received and accepted, and in his place William Munroe, Florence, Kansas, was elected. The executive committee was instructed to issue a new catalogue. The 1904 catalogue has proved a very valuable advertising medium, since it reaches the most desirable class. The co-operation of every earnest breeder of Reds is solicited.

PARTRIDGE COCHINS.

The Most Richly Colored of Our Standard Bred Fowls, and Their Characteristics.

The earliest mention made of Partridge Cochin fowls locates them in Taunton, Mass. Since that early day thousands of the highest quality have come from that locality into public view, and for years throughout the New England territory the name of Williams was closely allied with these beautiful fowls. Some of the most beautiful fowls that ever came from England came to Westchester, Pa., and the Shaner hen that passed into the possession of Mr. Williams was one of these early-day landmarks of the progress made with the Partridge Cochins.

This hen was an admitted world beater of the time. As the story goes, many wanted her, among them Mr. Williams, who offered $60 for her. "No," said Shaner, "too many have offered that price for her for me to sell at your offer." "Well, I will give $61," said Philander. "It is a go," said Shaner, and Mr. Williams got the hen. She was never beaten, we understand, in the show pen, and was the origin from which a grand line of females came. This illustrates an ever-present condition that confronts us all up to the present time. From the true bird female line on both sides must come the the truly fine exhibition females; and on the other hand, the male line must be as truly and distinctly bred.

The early-day Partridge Cochin females had the then called clay-colored breast, a dark salmon or brick color on upper part of breast and throat; this was declared a disqualification, and has been utterly obliterated. In the rear of the high school building at Urbana, Ohio, for many years was bred the finest Partridge Cochin produced anywhere in the world. Hundreds of beautiful specimens went from there into the hands of the most successful exhibitors, both East and West, and there is scarcely a breeder of early-day reputation but could find his way to the well-known spot near the outskirts of the old town of Urbana, Ohio. Urbana, Revanna and Ada, Ohio, ranked high in early-day Cochin culture.

Following came the successful days of Crosby and Hartwell; the latter continues in the fancy, the former has gone to other pastures. If poultry has an existence there we know not, but should such be the case many a good fellow and fancier is their to continue the trade. Sternberg, Todd, Allen, Robb, Spalding, and others more or less lent their aid to the Cochin fancy. None of these, however, took part in building up the Partridge variety as did Baldwin, of Iowa, who at one time had a superb lot of them. All of those mentioned except Mr. Hartwell have discontinued their culture; he alone of all the early-day helpers in their improvement continues their cultivation, and has been a successful exhibitor of this variety for a long period of years up to the present time.

Messrs. Nevins, Ball, Brackett, and others have from the first had good quality; of these only Mr. Nevins continues as an exhibitor at the larger shows. An element in the Partridge Cochin field is and has been, Mr. Sharp Butterfield and Mrs. Butterfield. These two, with their ever-ready, willing and competent lieutenant, James Tucker, have produced some good specimens of their kind. None have produced better quality.

The final summing up of the case brings us face to face with the fact that the most successful and long-continued producer of the finest quality of Partridge Cochins is and has been Mr. Mitchell, of Bristol, Conn. His name is naturally linked with New York winning Partridge Cochins, and we do not think there is in the world any other who has won for so many years in the closest competition so many prizes on this variety of Cochins. It may be safely admitted that he is at the head as a breeder of this variety, and no one can excel him in fitting them for the show room. He is a true fancier of sterling worth.

THEIR EXHIBITION QUALITIES.

No variety of color is more beautiful than the black red color of the male and the mahogany surface of the female. The rich top color of the male is quite in harmony with the underbody and breast color of rich glossy black. From the head to the tail coverts of the male should be an even rich red, neck hackle, saddle heavily striped with brilliant, glossy black that glistens in the sun like burnished steel. This is called the beetle-green sheen; breast and body color should be almost as brilliant black as the striping of the hackel, the entire tail rich, brilliant, glossy black, wing bow darker red than is the balance of the top color, wing bay and bar quite distinct and of a bright attractive color.

The female should have one even shade of mahogany surface color throughout. When this has a soft, velvety appearance it adds to the general attractiveness of color. Each feather to the end of the toe feathering (except the neck) should be penciled with a darker color, brown or black, that follows the shape of the feather; the more uniform the penciling the more beautiful and attractive will it be. When the coloring runs to the darker or black pencil lines the specimen is usually considered rather dark, and while this shade of color has been most popular among the New York winners of late years, it has a tendency to detract from the most beautiful color features of the Partridge Cochin female, the mahogany tint.

The object of all should be to have the surface color of the female of that shade of mahogany that leans rather to the red tinge in preference to the darker shade that leans toward the black. They may be either too dark or too light in shade of surface color, but it is the happy medium in color that is to be preferred. The color that reflects a reddish tinge rather than dark shading, is most beautiful. The favoring of the black, or nearly black, penciling has had the darkening influence over surface color. This has been encouraged as far as it should be allowed for the best interests of beauty of surface plumage, but fads and fancies rule the placing of awards, the same as it does the producing of changes and innovations in mating and breeding the specimens.

The entire fluff and foot feathering should be penciled almost the same as back and front. The main tail feathers mostly black or brownish black, and from three to five of the upper main tail feathers are often penciled in the best specimens. The neck hackle, to be the best, should be red on the edge of a black center. This would be the ideal hackle for the female, but is seldom, if ever, present on the best penciled specimens, which usually have penciling in the black of hackle, as do all penciled varieties of fowls that are deep in color. Such are the demands of the showroom at the present time of the shade of Partridge colored females of all birds. At night, under gaslight, in a coop that is a little cut off from the light such specimens appear to be almost a solid color, and the color of the shanks of some of them are as dark as the shanks of a Black Wyandotte.

The color question runs in streaks, for a while the then shade of lemon was preferred to true golden buff. Now fanciers are drifting back to the true, even, golden buff. This same will be true of the Partridge Cochin color. After the color of shanks and toes has been lost in our Partridge Wyandottes, the tide will turn. This could and would be true at this time were it not that the leaders in the fad have an oversupply of the too dark kind. These must be popular until someone gets a lot of the other kind, then the change will come. In the Partridge Cochins it has taken the turn, and we shall hope to see a better surface color in the near future on all that grade as first-class. The pen is mightier than the judge, and it is beginning to run in favor of true color of shank and surface color.

This same ruling passion took possession of the Dark Brahma and destroyed the surface color of the female, and blackened the shanks of the Silver Penciled Wyandottes. If people would study the influence that follows the utter disregard of nature's laws, less of this would come to destroy the value of a variety. Again, it is hard to say a truth that burns so deep, but judges close the other eye a little too tight on some points that should disqualify. Better deal out a few disappointments rather than to encourage suicide of a variety that is being driven to its own ruin.

MATINGS.

The present demand for Partridge Cochins makes the use of double mating unavoidable if we hope to produce the best. Some good colored females were shown at St. Louis; these and the males were prduced, it is said, by the single mating method. This we could accept as true, for the males lacked in color; they did not have the rich brilliancy of color they should have for a truly royal exhibition specimen. 'Tis true they were good, but not unusually fine as they should be to be classed with the best.

For double mating you must have a line for males and one for females, and never crossmate or intermingle the blood lines for the males; do not pay any attention to the color of the females along exhibition lines. Work for the color of the male, and mate the females of this line to the best colored males all the time, and keep the largest and best of these females for producing exhibition males. By so doing you will build up a color line for producing males that will give better color results each year. We have seen this continued until every feather on the entire back had a black center, the same as the saddle feathers, and some of the females from such matings had almost black breasts and a hackle almost like the male in color.

The female producing line must be established from the most perfect females, using males of the same line until you have established the female color and penciling so strong in both the males and females as to insure the true color and marking. In this way only can it be carried on for years to have them better and better all the time. To keep up size and constitutional vigor use only the largest, strongest, and most vigorous hens for producers. Know the hen that lays the egg that produces the best. Some never produce one as good as herself; others often produce better than they are themselves. Know the producers and follow them continually in line and cull out and be rid of the non-producers of quality.

FORM AND FEATHER.

No matter how beautiful they may be in color they are not Cochins unless they have the true Cochin type and feather. It takes the combination of size, feather, type and color to complete the true Cochin. If either is lacking the combination is broken and the specimen lacks one of the prime essentials of quality. A small, undersized specimen should go to Bantam Alley for honors; a close-feathered one is of no value whatever. For the Cochin type the full, rotund formation is absolutely essential for success, and following all these is the variety color that should be perfection in itself.

The Cochin must appear so large as to seem at least too massive for the exhibition coop. Their entire plumage must be long and very profuse in under fluff, the web in the feather is not to exceed about one-fourth the entire feather. This builds out the form and rounds up into the true Cochin shape. The body and entire frame must have the appearance of strength; in this way is developed the true Cochin type.

Size is largely influenced by the female. To have fine size and constitution use the large hens for producers. In this way only will size be maintained, and increased color is largely influenced by the male. Let this be a warning against the mixing of the male color line into your female line of producers. Keep them absolutely separate if it is your wish to have the finest exhibition specimens. It is useless to try to compete in the strongest classes unless your stock is bred to the purple and fed into the finest condition.

OTHER QUALITIES.

No fowl grown is better for the market than the Cochin; they are good for broilers, frying, small or large roasting fowls, and capons. The surplus stock can always be sold at the best prices prevailing in the markets. The male birds are a toothsome fowl when past two years of age, and the hens fill the market demand for fowl at almost any age. A Cochin that has been properly fed and looked after never becomes as tough as will some other birds, their meat continues to be soft and juicy to quite an age. They are good egg producers in winter if bred for that purpose. Fine exhibition specimens are so apt to be prolific egg producers as are closer feathered fowls.

It has been my pleasure to keep Cochins for many years, and the vote of the family at the table has always been in favor of the Cochin fowl for table poultry. Even the Indian Game could not find equal favor in our eggs. We know that some fail with them, largely the result of over-feeding. To do the best with Cochins they should be fed sparingly, and almost no corn at all, only to fatten them for the exhibition hall or the table.

McG.

Dorkings at Boston.

While many new varieties of poultry have made their entry into the show pen ranks, to the gratification of fanciers, none have made greater advances than the Silver Gray Dorking. The old royal Dorkings known for many centuries, have taken on a new dress in Silver Grays, that surprises old fanciers of even ten years ago. The beautiful white hackle, back and saddle of the cock, over a pure black breast and body, gives a decided character and contrast, not to be found in any other fowl. The color of Duck Winged Game is not so strong.

A lady passing down the row of Silver Gray Dorkings exclaimed: "Why they look as if they might have been raised by King Edward." The forty-eight cocks in one row of these elegant birds at Boston, were much admired and caused much comment.

The soft silver gray of the hen's upper parts, clearly defined necks of white and black, contrasts singularly with the rich salmon color of the breasts. Not only the colors but the forms of this old breed of fowls is one that would be hard to improve. The beauty of the modern feathered grays is sure to make its way with admirers of the beautiful, especially when accompanied with good laying qualities and flavor of a delicacy unsurpassed. That the Dorkings for some years back have been misrepresented, is a notable fact, but in time it will be of benefit to them. Even those show reports that give all the breeds a notice except Dorkings—some poultry papers leave them out of the list of awards—will find that such a course is unjustifiable. Dorkings will live on as they have done, while some of the newer breeds will be forgotten.

F. BROOMHOWER.

Pit Games at Shows.

I knew a man who produced from Black Breasted Red Exhibition Game crossed on Brown Leghorn, some of the best "general purpose" fowls I ever heard of. They were splendid layers and good table fowl, being fast growers and early to mature, feathering rapidly from the start. But this was not all; they were good looking. Looked like Pit Games, being of proper type, and of beautiful plumage. The cocks clear hacked, yellow legged, Black Breasted Reds, with solid black breasts; and they were good fighters, too, for a few rounds, but terrible cowards at the first touch of the gaff.

This strain of "dunghills"—for such they were—seldom failed to win in the "Pit Game" class when competing with real Pit Games. And what was to prevent? In other words how can Pit Games be judged by "looking" at them? Don't you see that the awarding prizes to Pit Games is a farce from beginning to end? Who can tell what a bird's fighting qualities are by looking at him? It is like measuring a toad's jump by looking at the toad. Pit Games are admired as a rule and add variety at the poultry show. There is no objection to that part of it. But the Pit cock's qualities are not external, and for that reason there is but one way to ascertain them—a test in battle. Cocking at poultry shows is not permitted, and so there the matter ends.

Even if every bird in the Pit Game class was actually a game, what rule would govern the judges? Would the short legged one win or the tall one? Don't say "the tall one," because there are plenty of cockers who always prefer short legged ones. It is purely a matter of opinion, and to prove that this is true, there are plenty of cockers who will bet all they own on their particular strains, be they reachy or otherwise. Who has the right to say which is best?

There are so many strains of Pit Games, representing almost all shapes and styles, that it would be impossible to draft a single standard that would be fair to all. Of course the various distinct kinds, such as Japs, Asuls, Caucasians, and the like, might be classified, and, so far as type is concerned, a standard might be made for each, and the various kinds compete in the classes to which they belonged, but even these "dunghills" might enter and stand an even chance of winning. To illustrate: The pure Jap has certain characteristics which differ from American or European games, but what would prevent the Malay from getting in its work? The Malay and Jap are built on the same general lines, and there is nothing to distinguish a good Jap from a Malay, except a test in battle. The real "Lamo," as the Jap is called in his native country, Japan, is a game bird, and used there solely for battle. The Malay is a rank coward, and couldn't stand before a real spunky Plymouth Rock. So on the whole way through. In England, where the Asul was made a show fowl and judged by an arbitrary show standard, it has become a "dunghill;" that is to say, it is no longer "game." At least the prize-winning strains are not. One of the most marked attributes of the genuine Asul is its gameness, and the Indian-bred specimens, and those in England not bred to a show standard, are yet game, but the show Asul has lost this quality. So says the best authorities on that bird. Old English Game has been made a show breed in England, and I've read more than once that the winning strains could not be relied upon in the pit.

In my opinion the Pit Game is all right as it is. This fowl needs no show prizes to boom it. Those who fancy Pit Games, whether for pit purposes or otherwise, prefer to breed game ones. Even though a Pit Game breeder never pits his fowls, keeping them only because he admires them, he invariably wants them of the right kind. He does not want "dunghills," and won't have them. When he buys he does not look for "prize winners," but pit winners, and you can't talk him out of it. As an argument in favor of showing pit fowls, some one may say that his fowls are both prize winners and at the same time game in the pit. That kind of reasoning does not cover the point at issue, nor disprove my claim, viz: That the awarding of prizes to Pit Games is a farce, because no one can tell by looking at them whether they are in reality "Pit Games" or not. If they are not, then they ought not to win and the word "pit" is a misnomer.

Boyer's Talk

The active, energetic hen, the hen with plenty of "elbow room," and all the comforts needed, is the business hen, the one that gives an account of herself in the nest.

It was once said that a lazy man will have lazy hens, and we believe it is so. But it remained for Editor Harker to say that a lazy fellow could make more money with a cow than he could with hens for eggs.

It is said by those who have tested the matter that the proper temperature for the safe storage of eggs is 28 to 30 degrees. At that temperature turning will not be required, which, however, is necessary when the eggs are kept at 25 degrees.

"While eggs are sold by the dozen, the hen is a fool that strains herself to lay large eggs; it is a deplorable waste of energy, an unrequited effort, an unappreciated philanthropy," wittily says an exchange. But such is not the case. She is wise in her production of large eggs, for they command a ready sale for her owner, and he, in turn, is so pleased with the reputation she is giving him, that her life is spared for future usefulness.

What and How to Feed.

Alfalfa hay cut up as is clover hay for poultry feeding, is becoming popular among poultrymen. It is a very good substitute for green food, and by some is prized equally as much as is clover.

Beans and peas are richest in nitrogenous matter (flesh-forming), with oatmeal, middlings, oats, wheat and buckwheat in the order named.

In starch, rice is the richest, with wheat, corn, oatmeal, barley, buckwheat, middlings and potatoes in the regular order.

Oatmeal combines the greater number of materials, and is therefore more perfectly balanced than any other.

The value of sunflower seed in the poultry diet is due to its richness of oil, affording an excellent tonic.

According to tests made in Germany, the digestibility of Indian corn consumed by poultry show that 92.5 per cent of the protein, 84.4 of the fat, and 91.7 of the starchy material is digested, as well as 43.3 per cent of the mineral matter.

Feeding burnt wheat, as well as the average screenings that are upon the market, is a decided waste, and improper food.

Clover or alfalfa hay cooked is better relished by the fowls than when steamed.

Too much salt as well as too much linseed meal in the mash is apt to produce bowel troubles. Too much salt often causes a loss of feathers.

Cooks tell us that eggs from milk-fed fowls are insipid and unsatisfactory when either poached or used in puddings.

The writer uses five pounds of linseed meal to 100 pounds of ground feed and 15 pounds of meat scraps, for the morning mash, and with excellent results.

Mangel wurtzel beets are excellent for poultry. They should be fed raw, cut in half and laid in the fed troughs.

Green cut bone has proved itself to be the greatest egg producing ingredient that can be placed in the poultry diet, but it must not be fed too heavily. An ounce per hen, fed two or three times a week, is about the proper allowance.

One ounce of salt per day for 100 hens can be fed with safety. Prof. Wheeler says for young fowls, four ounces of salt should be mixed in every 100 pounds of feed.

Ailments and Remedies

Poultry, as a rule, is of a hardy nature, and ailments are generally due to some mistake or inexperience of the keeper.

Comfortable fowls are rarely sick. Comfort includes many things: Cleanliness, regularity in feeding, pure food, fresh water, cool houses in summer and warm ones in winter.

Artificial heat should not be allowed in the hen houses during winter. Fowls kept is such places are more susceptible to colds than are those in warmly-constructed and well ventilated ones.

Dampness should not be allowed in the hennery; prompt measures should at once be taken to prevent it.

The chicken cholera scare usually begins about the middle of summer and extends to the end of September. It is always greatest in sections of the country where considerable corn is fed. Corn does not produce cholera, but it induces indigestion, which is generally taken for cholera. A hen infested with lice, and at the same time suffering from indigestion, is about as good a cholera substitute as anything we ever saw.

A fowl growing light is not always caused so by wasting of the liver. Often it is due to the fact that quarrelsome fowls in the flock are cowing it down and do not allow it to get the proper amount of food and strength.

When a cock has lost his voice and shows it by a difficulty to crow, a very effective remedy will be found in giving daily a teaspoonful of glycerine on which has been sprinkled a little chloride of potash. For bad cases, or when the above remedy does not prove effective, give a half teauspoonful of cod liver oil once a day.

In cases of chicken-pox and swelled head equal parts of vinegar and lukewarm water, used morning and evening as a wash, is very effective.

Liver complaint shows itself in a pale comb, wattles and face. Give the afflicted bird a pill the size of a pea made of baking soda. A one-grain quinine pill is ofttimes useful in such cases. Less grain and more green food and grit should be given.

For brightening the comb and wattles a mixture of two parts alcohol and one part glycerine has been used with success.

An ounce of sulphur, rubbed into ten tablespoonfuls of vaseline, makes an excellent ointment for scaly legs. This ointment is also excellent in cases of sorehead or chicken-pox. Mecurial ointment is also recommended.

It should be an iron-clad rule on every poultry farm that the moment a fowl is ailing it at once should be separated from the rest of the flock. If placed in a cage in a dry, warm room it can be best treated.

It is not profitable to doctor contagious diseases. Even if the fowl is apparently cured it will be of little or no worth for breeding purposes. Besides there is danger of carrying the disease to the rest of the flock. Kill and burn or bury deep all such.

If we doctor the slight ailments we will prevent contagion. Nip the trouble in the bud.

When we first kept poultry we found our greatest trouble to be roup. Now we find it the easiest trouble to prevent, for the reason that the moment we detect colds in fowls we give prompt treatment, and that ends the matter.

A Texas poultry woman says she has cured the worst cases of sorehead with an ointment made of a scant teaspoonful of carbolic acid to a tablespoonful of lard.

For swelled heads the following treatment is recommended: Mix one part spirits of turpentine and four parts sweet oil. Anoint head, face and comb daily. Also give a one-grain pill made of equal parts of bromide of potash and quinine twice a day, and add a teaspoonful of chlorate of potash to each quart of drinking water.

About Eggs.

A theory is advanced by a writer in one of our exchanges that allowing eggs to accumulate in the nest is the way to increase egg production, the idea being that the hens are always ambitious to add to the collection. That the theory has no foundation is well known to all practical poultrymen.

The arguments against allowing eggs to accumulate in the nest are many. First, eggs are often broken or cracked by striking against each other when dropped by the hen. Second, eggs thus broken in the nest often teaches the vice of egg eating. Third, the first eggs laid in the nest are subject to too much heat from the bodies of the subsequent layers, and in this way impart a stale flavor. Fourth, eggs would quickly chill during cold weather, making them useless for incubation.

It is a noted fact that users of trap nests have little or no trouble with egg-eating hens. When laying the bird is shut up in a semi-dark box, and after laying her egg is removed. If an egg eater should develop, she is readily detected by the attendant, and removed at once from the flock, thus preventing the vice from spreading to the rest.

A great point in good egg production is to keep the flocks tame. Do not allow anything to scare them if you can prevent it. Frightened hens as well as those that do not feel "at home" are not very satisfactory layers.

Overcrowding is a bad practice on an egg farm. Small flocks will always give better results. Overcrowding leads to idleness, and it is the idle hen that soon falls victim to such vices as feather pulling and egg eating, etc., and as she is a lazy glutton as a rule, will readily over fatten and be useful only in the pot.

American Black Minorca Club.

The tenth annual meeting of the American Black Minorca Club was held in connection with the great Boston Show at Mechanics' Building, Boston, on the afternoon of January 19th, 1905. Ten members only were present. The scarcity of members, however, did not quench the interest, and it was a pleasant meeting.

The following were the officials elected for 1905: George H. Northrup, President; Joseph P. Hilldorfer, Vice-President; H. C. Wheeler, Secretary and Treasurer, Lyndonville, Vt.; Directors, Geo. H. Dexter, E. L. Tallman, Dr. R. W. Baker, F. O. Groesbeck.

SATURDAY, MARCH 11, 1905.

Considerable correspondence has reached our office on the American Reds question for publication in The American Fancier. This matter, from our point of view, is a one-sided one, and needs considerable cerification before we agitate same at any length. It is evident that a grave error has been committed by some person or persons who are responsible for the destinies of the fancy, and until these errors are known "officially" we think it wiser to refrain from airing the subject n these columns. Had not the meeting of the American Poultry Association been called for April 4th the matter would have been different, but since the time is so near all hands can well afford to wait.

It is shown that the American hen produced more than 1,666,000,000 dozens of eggs in 1904. She is indeed a wonderful bird.

If all hands come from the Smoky City without someone being smudged it will be the eighth wonder of the world.

The American Fancier should be the poultryman's newspaper. Through its columns should be communicated all matters of interest to the entire fancy. Everyone should feel it his duty as well as a pleasure to transmit his thoughts and wishes along the lines of poultry culture to each other via the columns of this paper. Show secretaries and specially club secretaries are cordially invited to send all the club and show news to their constituency through the columns of this paper. Do not hesitate to do this; help to interest the whole country in poultry matters, and by so doing build up your own interests, and add to by publicity rather than to detract through silence.

Everyone throughout the entire country is invited to use the columns of The American Fancier for an interchange of thought that may be of interest. Things that please or attract you, must be welcome news to our readers. To serve your best interests there should be a world of news and information constantly presented. Help us to accomplish this; send early and often all the happenings relative to poultry and pigeons to this office for publication. Tell of your own success as well as the doings of others, and do not hesitate to report the failures with the same confidence that you would successful accomplishments; all will interest our readers. Some of them may be able to add a word that will help you to overcome a difficulty, and there will be untold strength gained through an interchange of experiences. "In union there is strength." Let us all join hands for the upbuilding of that which will give the most satisfactory returns to the entire fancy. This last may be gained through the extending of a helping word to your fellow laborers in the poultry work.

Mankind is more often affected with "swelled head" than is poultry, and the bad results are likewise greater.

Springtime is at hand in some localities, snow and ice holds control in others, but the heart of the fancier is with his feathered pets, and his whole interest is centered in the question of how to produce the winners for next winter. First of all remember that only the best quality of hens ever produce the winners. Cull out your pens. Have a few good ones only, rather than to keep any of inferior quality. Three high quality hens properly mated will produce more winners than will one hundred of poor quality. Keep the best hens only for breeders.

An egg is more an egg than man is a man—there are eggs and there are men.

If hens were as neglectful of their work as are some of their keepers they would soon be in the soup.

The American Fancier is a firm believer in the right of all things connected with the Association and the Associaton's doings, but cannot, under any circumtances, hold aloof when it is cognizant of a wrong being done to anyone. If those members were wrong in any way at the Minneapolis meeting it is time the wrong was acknowledged and made right. The only course to pursue is to look the proposition squarely in the face and not be afraid of the consequences. It is for this reason that we are willing to wait, and after that—well, never mind, we will hope for the best.

This has indeed been a strenuous winter all over the country, and we can but feel grateful the spring is so very near. Those who are busying themselves with their mating and breeding will doubly welcome the milder weather of spring. Every precaution should be taken to insure the best results, for little do you know but that you will produce a few "stars" that will make you famous in a night. Stranger things than this have happened many a time.

The sellers of squab breeders are overwhelmed with orders this spring. "There must be some money in the business," writes one of our correspondents, "because those who purchased last year have ordered again."

The fall shows are really agricultural fairs with a poultry department attached. Some are good, some are bad, and a number are exceptionally fine, and keep on improving year after year. All this has been touched upon week after week in The American Fancier, and the good points of each exhibition candidly given. So we will not dwell upon the respective merits of these big autumn functions, but attempt to briefly review the classes or varieties shown, not only at these, but at the winter shows.

The American classes lead by a large majority. The White Wyandottes are on top, having supplanted the American idol —the Barred Plymouth Rock. Specialty club work has caused this change, although the White Wyandotte has intrinsic merit of its own to keep in the front rank. The quality of White Wyandottes has been high at most shows, and in some instances quite in advance of birds shown in the past. But, we regret to say, the popularity of this fine variety of fowl has led unscrupulous breeders to take advantage of the situation and scatter throughout the country a lot of disreputable stuff under the good name of White Wyandotte. As an illustration we will cite an instance where a certain breeder advertised a very famous egg-laying strain of White Wyandottes, pedigreed birds, etc. He sold the eggs rapidly at big prices. But the men he sold them to were not posted; they were rich, had a manager to look after poultry, and bought the eggs in good faith.

We inspected a bunch of said White Wyandottes last December at a noted farm in Westchester County, New York. They were hatched from one of these famous egg-laying strains, and of all the motly-looking lot of culls one ever laid eyes on these were the limit. Not a Wyandotte type in the lot, large, ugly rose combs, high tails, full plumage, off-colored legs, and bad lobes; they presented a sight that made a Wyandotte enthusiast weary. And such trash was hatched from eggs that cost $3.00 to $5.00 a setting! That is one of the results of booming a popular breed. There are other instances to prove that undue advantage is being taken of unsuspecting customers when purchasing eggs. It is the old story of the Silver Wyandotte boom over again.

We write this in justice to the many excellent White Wyandotte fanciers that are represented in these columns, who have bred, raised, and sold first-class stock. They are the sufferers, because the shrewd fakir in the business gets unlawful returns through misleading advertisements. Every posted breeder and fancier knows that White Wyandotte breed is true, i. e., the genuine article. We bred White "eighties," and found the strains in those days nearly as reliable as White Leghorns in reproducing their progeny, and that is saying a great deal. The original White Wyandotte is a fixed type; the modern type should be the same.

The Buff Rocks have made giant strides and are close on the heels of the Barred Rocks, and at some shows have surpassed them in numbers. They have improved in quality wonderfully, and will prove a strong drawing card at most large shows in the future. The Buff Wyandotte is in about the same position, the improvement being great as far as quality is concerned, but they have not been as largely represented as the Buff Rocks. The Partridge Wyandottes have been a great surprise, the quality and numbers exhibited at leading shows exceeding all expectations. This variety has such intrinsic merit and surpassing beauty that it is bound to be a feature at all shows in the future. Silver Penciled Wyandottes are also looming up strong, the penciling and color of the females being particularly fine, as seen at leading shows in the past season.

Columbian Wyandottes are on the move. They are destined to reach the top rung of the ladder of popularity if the men that have them in charge now will persevere and improve them in the next few years as much as they have in the past year. They are strikingly handsome, and have a business look about them that should make them universal favorites.

Our old favorites, the Silver Wyandottes, are coming to the front again in due and ancient form. At New York and Boston they were great attractions. We wish we could say as much of the Goldens. The latter, a grand old variety, has been allowed to fall by the wayside, except in a few sections in the East and West. But the time is at hand when it will again be found among the popular entries in the American classes.

The Barred and White Rocks are universal favorites, and have held their own in quality at most shows. Of the other varieties we will write in a future issue.

The dates of the next New York show have not been selected or fixed upon, as the Madison Square Garden Company has not completed the schedule for 1906. But the same week in 1905 will not be available next season, so we are informed.

We asked Mr. J. W. Stanton, one of the directors of the Madison Square Garden Show, what dates are likely to be selected and he was unable to give the information with any degree of certainty, but hoped it would be close to the dates of the last show.

This is an important matter, as the fixing of show dates by the leading shows in the United States means much to exhibitors, as well as to the managers of such functions.

The Boston dates have been fixed for the third week in January. Atlanta, Ga., has the same week, and now we learn that Cincinnati, Ohio, will hold its next show January 16 to 20, also inthe same week.

Furthermore, the Queen City of Ohio will extend an invitation to the American Poultry Association to meet there in January.

Washington, D. C., is figuring on a great show the first week in February, and also expects to invite the American Poultry Association to meet there.

We also learn that an invitation will be extended to the A. P. A. to meet in New York city during the progress of the show. So there will be plenty of opportunity to think matters over and vote accordingly when a decision is reached.

The demon of unrest—the A. P. A.

Charles Bennington, the well-known and successful breeder of Buff Orpingtons, has purchased a farm of 80 acres at West Edmeston, N. Y., and will in the future devote his time to raising more Orpingtons of the kind that win the ribbons. He is busy now making plans for a lot of new up-to-date buildings. The success Mr. Bennington's first have attained in the hands of his customers is a source of much satisfaction to him, and the fact that he must increase his quarters for the production of more stock to supply the demand indicates a healthy state of the Orpington business.

If any readers of the American Fancier can inform us who is breeding Buff Langshans in this country we will be glad for the information.

W. J. Andrus, once a prominent factor in the Sebright Bantam alley at the New York shows, has been on a trip East recently, and seems to have quite a little of the chicken fever left. But the life on the plains of New Mexico, where sheep thrive and chickens are only considered as a source of amusement in the pit, has too much attraction for Mr. Andrus, and it may be some years before he will come back to his old home in New Jersey and start in the fancy again.

The seat of discontent—a small roost.

B. C. Thornton expects to locate at Chatham, N. J., in the future. Dr. Thornton has the same old smile and the same old love for Game Bantams as of yore. And he seems to be growing younger every year.

We have received several inquiries regarding "Buckeyes," their origin, and the reason for their admission to the American Standard of Projection, etc. This new breed was originated by a Mrs. Metcalfe, in Ohio, and called the Buckeye Red. It is similar in plumage to the Rhode Island Red, but differs from the latter in having a pea-comb. It has been exhibited according to rules laid down by the American Poultry Association at three annual exhibitions when the latter was present. At Minneapolis the name was simply condensed to Buckeye, the Red being dropped. We know nothing of the breed except from hearsay. The Standard prepared by the originator was read at the Revision Committee meeting at Buffalo, and was also in evidence at Rochester, we believe. But it was not read at the Minneapolis meeting. It will have to pass before the committee of five to be arranged to correspond with the standards for other varieties in form. Until it appears in the Standard we can give no intelligent opinion of the breed as to its shape and color.

As to the merit of Buckeyes we must refer our readers to the sponsors of the same, viz: Mr. Fred L. Kimmey, President D. Lincoln Orr, and Secretary T. E. Orr, of the American Poultry Association, and Mr. Theo. Hewes. These gentlemen have tried the breed and claim it to be useful and profitable. They are the godfathers of the Buckeyes.

It may now be in order to ask why cannot the Argonauts and Crimson Games be admitted to the new Standard. They are the product of some complicated crossing and experimenting indulged in by our old friend, H. S. Babcock, of Providence, R. I. He even wrote a book on the Argonauts. But that was before the Rhode Island Red boom started. Still, his birds have claims for recognition, to judge by the easy manner other "novelties" are introduced.

So the Boston Show will do away with novice classes next year. Good. Go further, gentlemen, and do away with Res., V. H. C., H. C., and all other C's. Make it straight American, one, two,, three, four, and five. Five prizes are an elegant sufficiency.

We have been and are receiving considerable correspondence on the American Red and R. C. Rhode Island Red matter. Much of this is personal in its tone, a lot more is purely free advertising matter. So we must politely and firmly decline to print any of it. Should the aggrieved parties of the first part, and also of the second part, deem it necessary to air their grievances in print they can do so by paying regular advertising rates at so much per line.

Secretaries of coming poultry and pigeon shows will confer a great favor if they will send in their dates, list of judges and officers as early as possible to The American Fancier, in order that we may be able to arrange our list of "Dates Claimed" in the most complete form at a very early date.

Broilers and Roasters is the title of a new book just published by Farm-Poultry, of Boston Mass. It is written by Mr. John H. Robinson, editor of the latter paper. Much practical and valuable matter is contained between the covers, and every poultry raiser should have a copy.

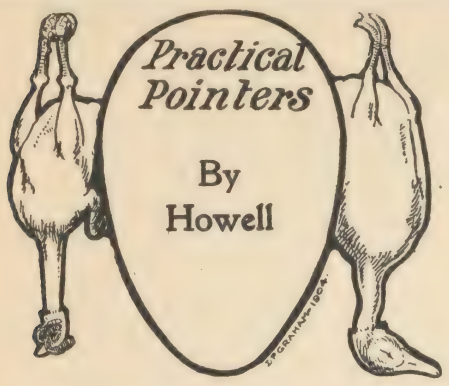
Another interesting and valuable contribution to poultry literature is M. K. Boyer's new book on Broilers and Squabs. It is written in "Uncle Mike's" familiar and pleasing style, and will prove of great help to the beginner in the business..

Our old friend, R. F. Alden, of Silver Wyandotte fame, is now located at Scranton, Pa., and although he is at present unable to keep a flock of chickens, he is still bubbling over with enthusiasm for the fancy. He informs us that a fine poultry show will be held in Scrantton next fall or winter unless all signs fail. The old chicken fever is returning, and there are real bad cases at present. A stock company will be organized, ,and plans for an up-to-date exhibition formulated. There is such a large colony of good poultry fanciers in and about Scrantton, Wilkesbarre, and Pittston that an annual show should be an assured success provided all will pull together.

With the advent of spring the African chicken breeder (?) gets the lay of the hen, while the tramp gets the lay of land. Between the two the owner of the flock is kept guessin', even with a shotgun as a companion.

Rhode Island Reds are an old and not a new variety. Farmers in Rhode Island had them some sixty years ago. Dr. N. B. Aldrich exhibited them fifteen years ago at the Madison Square Garden, and much of this blood was used in the make-up of Buff Wyandottes and Rocks. But the Single Combed and Rose Combed Rhode Island Reds have been bred right along under their proper and respective names This is writtten in answer to several inquiries regarding Rhode Island Reds.

The report on Leghorns and Minorcas at the Pittsburg Show appears in this issue. Owing to illness Mr. George H. Burgott was unable to write the above in time for issue last week.



A bad thought, like a bad egg, will easily spoil a case of good ones.

SAMUEL H. ROBERTS.

This will introduce to our readers Mr. Samuel H. Roberts, the new Secretary of the Boston Show. It is a pleasure to remember the great successes of this show, and its many victories are memories of a happy past in the show arena. The last ten years has made history for them, and its new secretary has, by his courteous treatment to all, won a host of friends and admirers. Our artist has endeavored to translate our editorial opinion of Mr. Roberts, and we feel most happy with the result, and will thereby commend same to our many readers.

A pretty good story is going the rounds at the expense of the storage egg. It runs this way:

While packing eggs for a storage plant a romantic young girl of sixteen summers inscribed her name and address on an egg with the wish that the eater thereof would communicate with her with a possible view to matrimony.

The weeks dragged themselves into months, and the months into years, and the young lady had reached the spinster age before the last chapter had been written into history. The egg in its time defying repository outlasted hope, when along came a candidate with the shell, vowing he had eaten the egg fresh in the morning and hastened to comply with the instructions inscribed thereon. He went back a disappointed man. The cold storage fooled his stomach, but Time's sway could not fool his eyesight.

A problem: 'Can the specialist afford to keep a general purpose fowl, or rather, will the general purpose fowl reach the ideal of the poultry raiser with a single aim in life?" I confess I do not know. I used to think there were breeds that left nothing to be desired, but things have changed. We look farther ahead than we used to. The man making a specialty of market poultry must needs favor the heavy breeds for his purpose The egg man the small breeds, because they deliver the goods and can be packed in closer, propagate an egg on less food, and oftener, two very essential reasons.

If neither of the market specialists want them, what sustains the popularity of the general purpose fowl? Where there is one ranch from which the owner is procuring his entire income, there are tens of thousands who keep a flock of fowls as a side issue, as a means of increasing the general income and to supply the home table with poultry and eggs. This is why the general purpose fowls win out; they are adapted to the wants of all but one in every ten thousand of our poultry keepers.

One of the most remarkable instances of the perverseness of dame fortune lies in the fact that while their owner is blowing about their great laying qualities at Farmer's Institutes throughout New York State, the birds themselves in the Australian laying contest are absolutely last. The value of the excess eggs laid by other pens in the contest "at fifty per cent above highest market quotations" would buy a cow.

A repetition of last year's late season will be discouraging to chicken raisers. Late chickens wil mean late layers, and little material for the fall shows.

It is true anyone with sense enough to operate one, can own an incubator these days, for they are about the cheapest thing on the market

Every one put in commission is a tribute to the coffers of John D. Rockerfeler and other Standard Oil magnates. Let every incubator operator order his oil from the independent refineries in Kansas, then working in a righteous cause, if the old hen will give us a few fertile eggs, success is bound to be our reward, and our conscience easy.

It is remarkable the many channels and arteries of trade affected by trifling causes. Here is this matter of coal oil. Before the advent of the incubator a chicken man would not have given it a second thought. Now hundreds of thousands are scattered over the country, all craving their portion.

White Minorcas at Chicago.

There were plenty of birds here brimful of quality, but the majority of them in poor show condition, being very dirty.

Cocks: First.—Fair headgear except lobes, lacks in breast, rather short in back, carries tail to one side and nearly upright, miserable condition.

Second.—No quality at all, comb turning to one side, lacks in breast, tail badly broken. Third.—A grand bird; an easy first; one of the best I have ever seen; The kind that Durand and O'Neill, of Canada, shows. The veriest amateur would have placed him first. Fourth.—Not a bad one, but lacks in breast, carries tail too high.

Hens: First.—A good one all through, grand shape, but very dirty. Second.—Only fair good type; smaller than first, and very dirty. Third.—Too much Leghorn type; was not entitled to any consideration; very dirty. Fourth.—Another of the Leghorn type; no quality at all. Fifth.—Good shape and size; far superior in every way to third.

No. 654.—By far the best hen in the class; a grand one all through; should have been an easy first. No. 675.—Another unplaced one better than the first in every respect. Nos. 684 and 686.—Unplaced; both of which were of better quality than 3d and 4th.

There was not a breeder present who could explain why No. 654 was not placed first.

Cockerels.—Eight; nothing startling in the lot, with the one exception of No. 666, unplaced; a grand bird of the proper type, but had his tail badly broken; notwithstanding his fault, he was a better bird than any of the winners.

First.—Would make a good Leghorn only for color of legs. Second.—A little green as yet; lacks in breast and tail; very much pinched, but superior to first. Third.—Comb frozen; lacks very much in breast, and carries tail upright; no quality at all. Fourth.—Leghorn shape comb; fails badly in breast; too high on legs; like a game; immature. Fifth.—Comb slightly frozen; fails in breast; long back and carries tail well; far better bird than either the first, second or third.

Pullets: First.—The only point to recommend her was her good shaped body. Second.—A good shaped one with good headgear. Third.—Too much inclined to the Game type. Fourth.—If the pullet was judged for best shaped head in Leghorn class, she could not be beaten; grand type of Leghorn head. Fifth.—More like a Leghorn all over (with exception of color of legs) than a Minorca.

No. 658.—Unplaced; one of the best Whites of the year. No. 664.—Unplaced; should have been away up. Nos. 659 and 670.—Unplaced; all four of these unplaced pullets were far better ones than had the ribbons pinned to their coops.—Fred Maunder.

Exhibition Games and Game Bantams at Chicago.

Exhibition games were not out in force, but what they lacked in numbers they made up in quality. Thompson, of Collinsville, Ill., and Brooks, of Buffalo, fought it out in most of the classes, and the Westerner came out victorious.

The Game Bantams also lacked in numbers, but were exhibited by such breeders as Voris, Thompson, Brooks, and a newcomer in the ranks by the name of Fred Y. Parfrey, who, by the way, seems to have the making of a first-class fancier, having purchased some high-class birds of A. A. Parker to start with. He said he was in the game to stay, and would be satisfied with only the best. In the variety Bantam alley was also a new recruit to the ranks in the person of F. W. Radford, who showed quite a string of Japanese Bantams that he purchased from Dr. A. H. Phelps. Mr. Radford seems to be made of the right kind of material to become a true blue fancier. A few more such recruits in the Bantam ranks as Mr. Parfrey and Radford will certainly make things hum in bantam alley.

A Beautiful Window.

At Mr. E. S. Schmid's well-known pet live stock, poultry, and pigeon emporium on Twelfth Street, Washington, D. C., may be seen a very artistically arranged show window containing several species of live quail. The setting of moss bark, trees and other little touches of nature seems to have agreed with the beautiful California quail and the famous "Bob White" of this section. They have been in captivity since December last, and are thriving and happy. Strict attention to cleanliness and plenty of flying room, with good feed, consisting of wheat, hempseed, and the like, seem to be the chief factors in keeping these wild birds in a healthy state. But Schmid is a genius in his line, and can handle anything from a snake to a giraffe with success.

How is your incubator running? Remember the quality in oil greatly varies. Keep the lamp wick from crusting. Aim to keep the room as near one temperature as possible. Follow the instructions of the incubator maker. Don't get "gay" and conclude you know more than the maker.

Beginners are apt to go astray with the brooder chicks by keeping them too warm. When it is advised that the chicks should be kept at 98 degrees, it does not mean that the brooder should be heated to that temperature, and the chicks put in for the night without changing the temperature. The increase the heat of the bodies will give must be considered after the chicks are in, and then regulate to maintain it at 98 degress.

During the day when chicks are running in and out keep the brooder heat up to the degree you may require, according to the age of the chicks. If the day is cold and the chicks crowd in, then be careful to regulate.

Too much heat weakens as does too chilly or cool temperature. Watch the broods. If they crowd to the center where the source of heat comes, there is insufficient heat. If they get away from the heat all they can and pant, they are too warm. Aim to get the heat to a degree that causes them to spread out contentedly orthughout the brooder.

Chicks require more heat when the air is full of moisture than when the temperature is colder but dry.

Exercise is absolutely necessary with brooder chicks, or else bowel trouble and cases of indigestion will surely result. Us plenty of short clean litter, in which scatter dry bread crumbs, millet seed, cracked wheat, very fine cracked corn, etc.

Don't overfeed. Keep them hungry enough to have a keen relish for their food. While young feed often and a little at a time.

Be sure fine grit is provided with the first feeding of young chicks. Have a clean feding board, and strew on it dry, clean, washed sand, and then put on the feed. Do this until chicks are strong enough to commence to scratch among the litter.

Cleanliness is as important as the food and proper heat.

These reminders are for bgeinners. And those that are taking up poultry raising are legion. G. O. B.

Leghorns and Minorcas at Pittsburg.

S. C. Brown Leghorns: Cocks.—Not a strong class; first shown in the best of condition; second, really the best bird, but is poorly shown; third, the best colored bird; good shape and a fair head; is set to third account of grey tips; balance of the class only fair. Cockerels.—Not a strong class; first, a strong colored bird in neck; fails in back, color; fair head; second, a very good bird not shown in the best of condition; balance of the class fair. Hens.—Only two really good ones; first, a very fine hen in color, with the exception is quite too much shaftying; fair legs; second, an old hen; good shape; a very good back; to shafty in wing bow; balance only fair. Pullets.—Two very good birds in the class; first, very finely penciled but is too shafty, spoiling the nice effect of her good penciling; second, not quite as shafty, but is not as good in shape nor head as the first. Pens.—First, a very good lot of females; not matched well with the male; second, has a fair male, but is not up with the females; balance only fair specimens, poorly shown as to condition.

S. C. White Leghorns: Cocks.—First, a white bird, good type; fair head and comb; off in color of legs; a very good bird; second, a good bird; not quite as white as first; carries his tail too high; balance of class very good representative birds. Cockerels.—First, a gem; the first cockerel at New York; best bird in the Whites; second, a very good bird; not as typical nor as white as first bird; balance of the class are all good show birds, and also strong in color. Hens.—First, a very typical bird, good color, and an easy winner in the class; second, is also a very good bird; somewhat off in head points; balance are all very good birds, fit for any show. Pullets.—A very fine class; first, the most typical, and is white; second, not quite as shapely; good color, and a good clean show bird; third, is also very well shown, but bird fails in head points; balance all good birds. Pens.—A large entry; first a grand pen; good females; male carries tail too high; second, also a very good pen, but poorly shown; another good one, and fails in second account of the male; balance good pens, not properly fitted.

S. C. Buff Leghorns.—Not a very large class, but contains birds in the first and second winners that are worthy of good mention, especially the first cock and first pullet.

R. C. Brown and R. C. White Leghorns.—Not very large classes, but contain some very good specimens. A large entry was found in R. C. White pens, but most of the birds were out of condition, shown in too small coops, and were not as attractive as they might have been; however, the same was a very good exhibit.

S. C. Black Minorcas: Cocks.—First, a grand typed bird; large and well formed; a winner anywhere; second, about the same kind of a bird; not quite as typical; third, a very good bird, but fails in type. Cockerels.—Both first and second you might say are duplicates of the cocks; grand Minorcas, and every day winners; balance of the class only fair. Hens.—First, a grand hen; elegant type, grand color, not a trace of purple to be found in her plumage; the second is a close race for first; is, however, not quite as typical; third, a very good bird; loses on account of broken feathers, and not shown in good condition; balance, fair. Pullets.—First, a grand, large bird; the proper type and color, and an easy winner; second, the same kind of a bird; not quite as large; balance only fair birds, and are not shown in proper condition. Pens.—A good, average lot of birds, but not up to the mark that the first and second winners are in the open class. The Minorca class, however, one of the very best to be found, and birds fit to grace any show room.

GEORGE H. BURGOTT.

Wisconsin State Poultry Show.

The eighth annual exhibition of the Wisconsin State Poultry Association was the largest and most successful ever held in the State. Birds from all parts of Wisconsin were exhibited, and the large Armory Building at Oshkosh was filled with birds of high quality. Many fanciers were present, making the show more pleasant to all. From a business standpoint every exhibitor must have been satisfied, for over 100 birds were sold during the show. Oshkosh is one of the best sales towns. Because of its central locaion and superior railroad facilities, many buyers were in consant attendance looking for the best. Judge Shellabarger placed the awrds.

Barred Plymouth Rocks were the largest class, 125 birds being shown. The quality was right up to the quantity. White Rocks were out in force, among them birds fit for keenest competition. The Buff Rock class was very small, but some good birds were shown. In White Wyandottes there was a class of the very finest specimens. One exhibitor had something of a walk-away, bu this was due to the superior quality of his birds, not to the poor quality of the others. Silver Penciled Wyandottes, Buff Wyandottes, Partridge Wyandottes, and Silver Laced Wyandottes were well represented. As usual, the Black Langshan class was large and strong, partly due to the Langshan cup offered here. The Bantam class at Oshkosh is always a large one, and this year was no exception to the rule. Other large and meritorious classes were Cornish Indian Games, Single and Rose Comb Brown Leghorns, Single Comb White Leghorns, Light Brahmas, Rhode Island Reds, and Black Minorcas. The show next season will rival even this one in scope. Full particulars concerning it will be published later. Frank W. Radford, Secretary.

Pigeons

To My Friends and Fellow Fanciers:

I have the pleasure of announcing that I have been engaged to conduct the Pigeon Department of The American Fancier, and also that of The Feather. It is an honor of which I am justly proud to be associated on the editorial staff with such sterling men and gentlemen as those who are shaping the destinies of these two journals.

It shall be my earnest endeavor to report pigeon news in a fair, fearless, and impartial manner, giving credit where credit is due, and to censure anything which savors of questionable dealing, when I am thoroughly convinced of the circumstances. I always enjoy speaking well of anyone, and abhor the contrary, and my motto shall ever be the golden rule, "Give everybody a square deal."

I earnestly request correspondence with anyone interested in pigeons on any subject. If a question arises to deep for me, it will be no trouble to look it up. All friendly discussions are solicited, but disagreable personalities and unsavory squabbles will not be tolerated. I wish you all a most profitable and successful breeding season, and extend to you the courtesies and privileges of these columns.

Show season has passed.

Breeding season is again upon us.

The wise breeder is spending much time studying his birds before mating.

After satisfying yourself that you have selected the proper cock and hen for best results, let them have at least two nests before breaking and remating.

The aggregate number of pigeons exhibted at the various shows the past season far exceeds any previous show period. There were more shows held, and with few exceptions the entries were record breakers.

The annual meeting of the American Pigeon Club, held during the week of the Madison Square Show, was the best in its history. Many knotty questions were satisfactorily settled. A full report will appear. in. the next issue of the The Feather.

The great number of birds that were smothered in one of Adams Express Company's cars on their way home from the Boston show, is appalling. It seems that Jacobins, Pigmy, Pouters, and Tumblers suffered the most. Mr. A. B. Haskins lost his entire entry of sixteen Jacobins, some very famous birds, making his loss about $1,000. Mr. L. W. Hyde, Jr., lost ten of sixteen Jacobins, all birds which have won firsts, and his money loss is probably nearly $1,000. Dr. L. H. Jones lost eight of his best Pigmies, all New York and Boston winners, and so it goes down the line. At least $5,000 worth of the best stock in the country was literally cooked by the carelessness of the express agents. Suit has been instigated in every case, with all probability of recovery.

American Pigeon Club bands will next year contain four numbers. In every size they will run from 1 to 9999, entirely obviating the annoyance of duplicate numbers. By the way, the official bandmaker, Mr. Thos. Willetts, is very sick, which in a way accounts for the delay in filling some orders.

The cups won with young birds by Merrs. Diffendeffer at Madison Square this year have been on exhibition in this city for a few days and have attracted much favorable attention. As they left the selection to us we take pride in our pick. They are solid copper, eight and a half inches high, with pewter stem and handles. The engraving is a work of art. The cups were awarded by the Pigmy Pouter Club. This club has decided to make an issue of novices' winnings in the future, and make it worth the while for any member who has not won a first at a club meet to come with his best and try hard.

Mr. D. H. Jenkins, of Indianapolis, is and has been sick most of the winter. The fancy will undoubtedly regret to learn that he will not mate up his birds this spring on that account, but will sell all of his grand little Pigmies. We hope he will soon recover and that means that he will have another stud as soon as he is able to attend to them.

A new timing device for flyinng homer breeders is about to be put on the market. It records the departure and arrival of birds, and is absolutely accurate. It is a German invention, and is extensively used in Germany, France, Belgium, and England. It will be a boon to racers, as one of satisfactory operation has never before been produced.

"It has been arranged by some of the "Flying Clubs" to liberate a large number of birds from the dome of the Capitol on March 4th, while the President is taikng the oath of office. This is quite a novel idea, and the birds will be anxiously watched for by the thousands of visitors, and by those of the neighboring towns, for they will tell of the inauguration of a new Administration, and will fortell a season of prosperity and peace, of which they are the emblem.

The secretary of the American Pigeon Club reports a large increase in the number of members over last year, when 225 were enrolled. He expects to swell the list to 300 this year. It is surely a national club, for its roster includes fanciers from every State in the Union, and the esteem with which the championship certificates are held is shown by the prompt demand of the owner of first prize winners at shows held under its rules. Many birds have become champions this show season. A beautiful diploma will be awarded to each, and hereafter that particular bird will have to be exhibited in the champion class, when such classes are provided, which will be at the leading shows.

Mr. Jos. F. Bardroff has disposed of all his famous colored Pigmies and will confine himself to Whites hereafter. It is well that some experienced breeder has taken this step, and it is a wonder some one has not given his undivided attention to the improvement of this class before. They are certainly far inferior to the colored birds. We were glad to notice an improvement in the young classes this year, and hope it is the result of careful breeding. Close attention is the only way to accomplish anything. They are just as poor abroad, so importation is no help.

Reports from most of the secretaries of specialty clubs claim an increase in membership. Many of the clubs elected new officers for the year. The steady growth of the fancy is the cause of the increased membership. Not only is the fancy pigeon coming to the front, but the number of squab raisers is growing apace, which is not wonderful considering the profit derived from the small capital and labor required.

Mr. A. D. Brown, who had such a phenomenal season last year, is facing some obstacles just now, we are sorry to say. His trouble is the location of his lofts. Only year before last he built nice new lofts, but last fall found that his birds were not safe from those who coveted them and took them without asking. He lost a number of fine pigmies, but was fortunate enough to recover them. He does not feel quite safe, and has them in temporary quarters until he can buy or build a house to his liking. It is rather early in the season, and we expect to see him nicely located before it is time for squeakers.

Mr. C. Hugh Duffy has the boating bee, and is now breeding "gasoline engines" instead of Jacobins. He has retained, however, the nucleus of a grand stud, and he may at any time get to work with them again. The location of a suitable loft is his greatest trouble, and when that is settled we will hear from him again.

Mr. Geo. Eckert, of Allentown, Pa., will be reinstated in the American Pigeon Club in May. He was suspended two years ago on account of some irregularities in showing his Owls at Pittsburg. The severity of the penalty was more for an example than the gravity of the offense. It was evidently a good example, for no one has given occasion for suspension since. Mr. Eckert has continued to breed Owls up to his past standard, and n ext year he will be to the fore again.

The Washington Show Association is carefully arranging preliminaries in view of perfecting plans which will insure a show every year that will be considered among the leading shows of the country." It is positively to be a fixture, and it is well to have a good foundation, so that the same thing will not have to be gone over year after year. When the method now being pursued is finally settled and the finishing touches applied, it will be as substantial and practical a system as experience and intelligence can possibly make it. All breeders should keep this in mind and prepare for warm competition and the swell specials that will undoubtedly be added. Mr. H. J. Young, of Buffalo, N. Y., is one among many who is looking forward to this show. He writes: "If you have a show in Washington I will surely make a good entry."

E. C. Duffy.

Their Next Judges.

The following judges will officiate at the annual exhibition of the Western Connecticut Poultry Association, to be held at Danbury, Conn., November 29 to December 2:J. H. Drevenstedt, who will take the American classes; Hon. D. A. Nichols, who will place the ribbons on Asiatics and Bantams, and W. H. Cord, who will handle the Mediterranean classes.

C. H. Brundage, Sec,y.

Officers Buff Leghorn Club.

At the annual meeting of the Buff Leghorn Club, held at Madison Square Garden, New York City, the following members took an active part: Thomas Peer, Aug. D. Arnold, E. G. Wyckoff, Herbert W. Smith, Wm. Campbell, Frank I. Bennett, John I. Craig, R. N. Jacobus.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Thomas Peer; eastern vice-president, E. G. Wyckoff; middle vice-president, S. M. Keltner; western vice-president, Gene M. Simpson; secretary and treasurer, Geo. S. Barnes, Battle Creek, Mich.

The officers of the club met at the Coliseum at Chicago, and several important matters were discussed. The secretary has about 100 books left which will be sent to anyone asking for it free of charge, Now is the time to join and get your name in the catalogue.

THE BEGINNER AND THE EARLY HATCHED BROOD.

In writing this article, the writer will try and direct his efforts in behalf of the novice and beginner, as all experienced breeders have a method of caring, housing, feeding, etc., of their own. We will start with the newly hatched chick and follow it up from the shell to maturity, by different stages of growth. My advice to the beginner is the result of years' study, observation and experience.

To start with, never remove the chicks from the nest until they are all hatched and nice and spry. Especially is this necessary in early spring, when the weather is cold. Have a good coop in readiness for the reception of the mother hen and her brood. I wish to lay special stress on the importance of a good, well-constructed coop—not necessarily an expensive coop, but be sure it has a good roof and is proof against the onslaughts of the wet and cold weather, which is sure to strike the amateur and veteran alike in early spring. Place your coop in a sunny place where it is protected from the north wind as much as possible. After you have all in readiness and your chicks are nice and spry, remove old "biddy" and install her and her little family into the new home.

Do not feed the little infants until they are from 24 to 48 hours old. What and how to feed is the secret that will either set the beginner on a firm basis or else upset him entirely. There are chick feeds galore—some good—some poor, and I am positive that good, strong, sturdy fowls can be raised without the aid of the various advertised chick feeds.

The finest lot of White Plymouth Rocks I ever raised (and by the way I raised a good many in my time) were started on stale bread moistened with sweet milk—just enough to form a crumbly mass. The way those chicks started to grow was a revelation to me, and ever since that I am a firm believer in stale bread and sweet milk as the best food for the first ten days. However, the bread must positively be stale; and moistened just enough to form a nice crumbly mass. I killed a nice batch of chicks one time experimenting on fresh bread, and that convinced me that fresh bread is to be strictly avoided. It gets doughy and bowel trouble is sure to result.

After the first ten days I start feeding finely cracked corn, cracked wheat, millet seed and rolled oats. Keep fresh water before them all the time. Be sure and do not overfeed, but feed from 3 to 5 times daily—just a little at a time. Give them green food in some form, such as finely cut cabbage, apples, lettuce, etc. Grit is another article that is of vital importance. Both you and your chicks need it. Every good poultryman has "grit" and sees to it that his chicks have a sufficient quantity before them at all times. If your chicks have plenty of free range, and you do not raise very many, you need not bother about meat, as the insects they will catch will be all that is necessary in the form of meat. However, if you raise large numbers or live in town, I would advise you to feed meat in some form after your chicks are 3 or 4 weeks old. Meat is a strong food and must be fed sparingly. Twice a week is often enough, and feed just a little at a time.

After the chicks are six or eight weeks old they should be fed liberally. I am sure more injury is done from that age on by underfeeding than overfeeding.

Many a nicely started flock is ruined by not feeding enough. You can now feed whole wheat, coarsely cracked corn and hulled oats.

Your chicks will now need a colony house in which they can roost without being crowded, and breathe plenty of pure air. Many a beginner makes a sad mistake by allowing his chicks to remain crowded in their small coop till they are nearly matured. Provide a nice, roomy colony house for your little flock. An organ or piano box is just the thing and can readily be transformed into an ideal colony house. In constructing your colony house, see to it that your chicks will have plenty of ventilation and are kept nice and dry.

If you follow these hints I am certain you will have a flock to be proud of for the fall shows.

Winter Laying in Cold Houses.

In the American Fancier of February 11th Mr. Howell asks for opinions on the effect of cold houses on laying. Your readers will probably have seen in the newspapers we have had almost unusual cold in Montana. It is said to have been 53 below zero not far from here. All the grain fed my fowls during the cold was warmed on a stove and fed rather warmer than merely the chill off. Twice a day they had corn, and after the morning feed oats were given them in the litter to scratch out. The water given was tepid. They had no soft food, except the Red Dorkings had generally bread and milk for breakfast. I regret to say there were twenty-five degrees of frost in their house, but the other house was very slightly warmer. I thought they would stop laying altogether, but the Dorkings have continued to lay, but not as well as they did before the great cold. The other fowls nearly stopped but not quite, and are now back to where they were before the cold began. The Red Dorkings seem great winter layers, though the eggs are not large, but this is probably due more to strain than breed. One of them is now setting, but I fear the eggs may have been chilled immediately after being laid. I believe if hens are the right age and are properly fed and have lots of exercise, that they will lay in any house that is without draughts almost regardless of how cold it may get. Three or four degrees of frost makes little if any difference. In houses that are as cold as mine was, unless the eggs are gathered very soon after being laid, they freeze solid. It is impossible to heat up the yolk of an egg if it has been frozen as much as this, even after carefully thawing it out. The combs of some of the Dorking hens were slightly frosted, but the cocks' were not. The other fowls with rose combs were all right, except the cock, who, as so often happens with rose combs, froze his wattles. I shall, of course, alter my houses to try and make them much warmer, as birds kept in them must suffer discomfort, even if they remain in health. I should like to hear from other Dorking breeders whether their birds have laid well this winter. If any of your readers have a plan of a house suitable for an arctic climate, now is the time to bring it out, before we have forgotten the great cold, for though it is fairly warm now, what it was is still fresh in our memories.

Says World's Fair Award Were Sold.

Salt Lake City, Utah, April 12.—The special committee recently sent to St. Louis by the lower house of the Legislature of Utah to investigate irregularities in the accounts of Utah's Commission to the Louisiana Purchase Exposition has presented a report that is severe in its criticism of the management of the Exposition. The report says:

"We are unanimous in reporting that, according to our knowledge and belief,, the so-called awards, consisting of medals, ribbons, etc., supposedly given as marks of merit by the St. Louis official award committee by authority of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition to the so-called successful exhibitors are in our opinion an immense and gigantic fraud."

The report charges that so-called awards of merit are being issued "by a straw incorporation" for the sole purpose of being sold to be used in a commercial way as advertising matter. The committee reports the substance of a conversation with an agent alleged to be employed specially to sell these awards on commission.

The alleged agent, the report says, exhibited one award "of special merit" that he said he had sold for $500, and stated to the committee that a certain well known manufacturing concern had paid as high as $20,000 for a so-called official award to be used for advertising. The committee further charges that legitimate medals were being held back by the Exposition management to promote this traffic in awards.

In its investigation of the Utah Commission the committee verified various charges of irregularities, including forgeries of vouchers aggregating $2,100. The legislature will be asked to appropriate $7,000 to cover the deficit in the funds of the State commission.

Representative S. J. Stockey, W. N. Gundry and H. S. Josephs composed the sub-committee that reported on conditions at St. Louis.—N. Y. Herald.

Those Faverolles at Herald Square.

To the American Fancier:

In your issue of January 21, a letter appeared under the caption of "An Explanation," over the name of Mr. J. H. Symonds. It had been my intention to pass this over in silence, but letters which I have received from interested parties, among them the judge who changed the awards, and one from an extensive breeder of Faverolles, who saw Mr. Symonds' birds at Herald Square, and who himself exhibited Faverolles in competition with Mr. Symonds and myself at Madison Square, have caused me to send this "explanation of an explanation."

Mr. Symonds' statements so far as they go in reference to the Herald Square incident are correct. The judge did originally place the blue ribbon upon his birds, The judging was done upon Tuesday afternoon, and I didn't reach the show until Wednesday afternoon, when I called Mr. Jager's attention to the fact that he had placed the award upon Faverolles that were disqualified, for the reason that they had not the correct number of toes upon both feet, as well as for wretched color defects. Two of the birds had five toes upon one foot and four upon the other. The salmon pullet had black muffling and a breast badly fouled with black, and both the cockerel and cock had an abundance of white in the breasts, all of which are disqualifications according to the English standard for Faverolles. Mr. Jager stated to me that he had never judged Faverolles before, and that he was not aware that there was any standard for them, remarking that he "supposed it was merely a matter of feathers, and the more feathers the better." I handed him a copy of the official Standard adopted by the English Faverolle Club, and requested him to reconsider the matter, as I seriously objected to being beaten by disqualified birds. Mr. Jager read the Standard over carefully, and then went to the office. Half an hour later he returned and changed the awards. I was very much annoyed by this incident at the time, and supposed it closed until some of the poultry journals published the awards giving first premium to the disqualified birds. I then called Mr. Jager's attention to the fact, and he, at my request, sent the correction which later appeared in these journals.

Now in reference to the Madison Square Show at which Mr. Symonds exhibited three very fine Salmon Faverolles, males. All were apparently of the same age, and all had very slightly developed spurs, not one half inch in length. With these Mr. Symonds won first on cock and first and second on cockerel. These birds were as I have said apparently of the same age, and this was called to the attention of Mr. Crangle, who admitted that they were to all appearances early hatched cockerels, but said that as they had been entered as cock and cockerels he disliked criticising that point. I will state that if these really creditable males are the same birds which Mr. Symonds exhibited at Herald Square a month earlier, he possesses secrets of effecting radical changes and new growths that would be most interesting for poultrymen to know. Both Mr. Whitty, who saw the birds at Herald Square, and I, were as positive in our opinions as it is possible to be that these were not the same.. I might also add that the Faverolles exhibited at Herald Square were not the same birds which I had at Madison Square, therefore Mr. Symonds' comparisons do not apply. In closing I will say that I have absolutely no wish to do anything prejudicial to Mr. Symonds, and I wish him the success his birds merit, hoping that I may meet him in friendly competition at New York Shows next saeson, under a judge who is familiar with Faverolles as they are judged at present in England and France, and then "May the best birds win."

DR. A. H. PHELPS.

Dorkings.

The show of Silver Gray Dorkings at New York and Boston, 1905, was a great surprise to many fanciers. The American Dorking Club held its meeting at Boston, and the prizes offered brought out a string of birds such as were never shown before in America. Forty-eight Silver Grays, not as many as usual, but there was so little difference in the birds that it was a difficult class to judge.

The changes that have taken place in this variety of fowls is such that one must keep pace with the change if he expects to win. The male's hackle is whiter, breast and tail perfectly black, while the hen's back is of a lighter silver gray, neck pure white and black, with breast a decided salmon color.

There is room for all. Let us hope there will be more aspirants for the beautiful Silver Gray Dorking breed, as one of the most beautiful of our domestic fowls, the ancestors of which were known in history centuries ago. In breeding Dorkings one can go direct to business. There is no breeding specially for cockerels or pullets, one mating will answer. Fine, large, well colored birds will produce the same with little change.

As they are good setters and mothers, there is no incubator or brooder required. I raise all my stock under mother birds. They are good layers, and there are none better for the table. They mature as early as any other birds of their weight. I do not find them tenderer than other chickens with large quill feathers, and after that period of growing wings they are quite hardy. There is little doubt that if they were better known they would be greatly appreciated. There is more need of selection in the colored Dorkings, as they are apt to run lighter or darker. Light colored cocks should be mated with dark hens, or light hens with dark cocks. The colored Dorkings are apt to be heavier than Silver Grays and there is more latitude in judging. The White Dorkings are not as large, on an average, as the other two varieties, and have rose combs, while the others have single combs.

There are many more people breeding Dorkings than there were ten years ago, and if the managers of poultry shows would offer better inducements many more would be exhibited. It is to be hoped the Dorkings will become more popular as they are more appreciated every year.

BOYER'S TALK

Trap Nest Trials and Farm Experiences.

The trap nest is as important on the egg ranch as is the incubator on the broiler farm, and no enterprsing poultryman would think of running a utility plant without the aid of this later-day invention.

Trap nests have been on the market for about ten years, the writer being one of the first to test their merits, the results of which need hardly be mentioned here, excepting to briefly note that they enabled us to pick out our best layers and get rid of the drones. In other words, we received better results from two-thirds the number of hens—they being the cream of the flock—than we did with our pens filled.

We were also able to select from our layers those hens which gave us the most perfect shaped eggs, getting rid of such as laid long, pointed eggs, round eggs, small eggs, and eggs with ridges. As each egg was numbered we could readily note the color as well as the productiveness.

This gave us a chance to build up a future strain of fowls that were good, steady layers of the best eggs for size, color, shape and fertility. Not only could we pick out the eggs that were almost a guarantee for fertility, but also eggs that invariably produced strong,, rugged chicks.

Trap nests also proved valuable to us in many other ways and were especially commendable for preventing crowding on the nests and breaking eggs, as well as getting rid of the vice of egg-eating.

In the early days of trap nests the machines were crude and very easily got out of working order. As soon as a man thought he had struck the right idea he would rush into print. The writer, in consequence, received complaints right and left, and this new innovation seemed to be doomed. So we arranged a contest. We wrote to the manufacturer of every machine on the market and secured a sample. These nests we placed in our breeding pens, and carefully noted each day's operations, keeping a careful memorandum of all misshaped, good and bad points, etc., of each trap, and summed up the good and bad points, together with suggestions, at the end of the contest.

It would make too long a story to give it all here, but it narrowed down to two makes as the most accurate; the Cuckoo, invented by a cabinet maker in Hammonton (who has since died), and the Ideal, invented by F. O. Wellcome. The Cuckoo had a number of advantages which the Ideal did not possess, and won the day. Today the Ideal is greatly improved, which Mr. Wellcome says is owing to the features and suggestions brought out in that contest, and is the only trap on the market that we feel safe in recommending.

But we did not start out to give a free advertisement, but rather to mention these facts to draw the readers' attention to the value of these devices, and incidentally to add a little history.

January 1, 1905, we started to make a series of experiments with traps for the benefit of the readers of the Feather and the Fancier.

We set aside eight pens, numbered 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11. In each of pens No. 4 and 5 we placed fifteen two-year-old White Wyandotte hens.

In each of pens Nos. 6, 7, 8, and 9 we placed fifteen White Wyandotte pullets. Pen No. 6 contains April-hatched pullets, while those n pens Nos. 7, 8, and 9 have May-hatched birds.

Pen No. 10 has ten two-year-old Light Brahma hens, and pen No. 11 has ten May-hatched Light Brahma pullets.

These birds were selected from about a half dozen poultry farms where no trap nests were used, and consequently had no record by which we could decide in making our selection. Our idea is to see just what a man may expect to receive when he buys stock here and there with the only recommendation that they are "good layers."

In making our selectiion we chose birds that had a prim body, good headgear, and a quick, active gait.

In each pen we hung up our numbered leg bands—in pen No. 4 the leg bands were numbered 1 to 15, inclusive; pen No. 5, 16 to 30, and so on for the six Wyandotte pens. For the Brahmas we used bands we had on hand, with no regularity in numbers, which will account for the variety of figures in those records. As soon as a hen was caught in the trap nest and had laid, a band was fastened around her leg, and her record began.

Hen No. 16, of pen No. 5, became broody on the first day of January, and not wishing to set her we placed her in a cage for two weeks, and received the first egg from her January 14th.

January 25th the blizzard struck this section, and for several weeks our stock was kept indoors, yet it will be noted that during this time they did not lose, but rather gained in egg production. This we consider due to several causes, viz., proper food, exercise (the hens were made to scratch for their grain), and the advance of the season.

Jan.	Pen 4	Pen 5	Pen 6	Pen 7	Pen 8	Pen 9	Pen 10	Pen 11	Total.
1	2	1	3			2			8

Tot'l	53	71	149	47	15	74	42	11	462

The above table shows that the highest number of eggs gathered in one day was 25, and the lowest number 6.

Pen No. 6 laid the most eggs during the month, giving 149, an average of 10.4 per hen.

At first the hens and pullets seemed a little shy of the trap nests, and a number of them laid their eggs in the corners of the house, on the roosts, and other places.

During the month of January we found six eggs outside the trap nests in pen No. 4, four in pen No. 5, twenty in pen No. 6, two in pen No. 7, one in pen No. 8, seventeen in pen No. 9, two in pen No. 10, and one in pen No. 11.

Pen No. 10, Brahmas, 14 eggs; No. 11, Brahmas, 11 eggs; No. 6, Wyandottes, 10 eggs; No. 9, Wyandottes, 9.2 eggs; No. 5, Wyandottes, 8.7 eggs; No. 7, Wyandottes, 6.5 eggs; No. 4, Wyandottes, 5.2 eggs; No. 8, Wyandottes, 5.1 eggs.

Number of hens laying: Pen No. 4, 10; No. 6, 14; No. 5, 8; No. 7, 7; No. 8, 3; No. 9, 8; No. 10, 3; No. 11, 1. Total, 54.

Number of hens not laying: Pen No. 4, 5; No. 5, 7; No. 6, 1; No. 7, 8; No. 8, 12; No. 9, 7; No. 10, 7; No. 11, 9. Total, 56.

The fifty-four laying hens and pullets gave an average of a fraction less than 9 eggs each for the month.

It might be said, in justice to the stock, that the weather during the month of January was very unfavorable to egg production, and it was necessary to keep the fowls indoors during the best part of the month. Yet, withal that, they remained in a good healthy condition, and at the end of the month they are perfect pictures, with red heads, showing that the prospects for good work during February is very encouraging.

Elsewhere on this page is printed a communication from Mr. D. Lincoln Orr, President of the American Poultry Association. This is a remarkable proceeding and a remarkable case for all hands to consider, and we are of the opinion that it would be best to adopt measures immediately for the absolute settlement of the question, which is apparently disrupting the association. While the question under discussion is of small moment, we can hardly say as much for those officers who have had the handling of it. Evidently someone is trying to evade the criticism of the fraternity, but instead are going deeper into the mess, for a mess it is. There is no other course open for the Pittsburg meeting than to take hold of the matter and sift it to the bottom. This we hope will be done, no matter what the consequences may be.

Now, we are not of the same opinion as Mr. Orr, when he says he sincerely trusts that the action at the Minneapolis meeting will be sustained. Our reasons are simple and just. We know there was no true action taken on the subject—the whole thing was a fiasco, and the sooner it is obliterated from the records the better will be the understanding. It is evident, however, that there was gross carelessness on the part of those responsible for the association's honor and integrity in permitting the matter to be railroaded through. This is folly. So important a question as the adoption of a standard for a breed of fowls is no plaything, if some would try and have us believe so, and the only quarrel we now have is to get the tangled skeins straightened out the best way possible for the benefit of all hands concerned.

It is difficult for us to imagine the position taken by those members of the Executive committee who have signed the petition mentioned by Mr. Orr. It is the most foolish thing in the world to imagine that such a procedure would help matters. It is like shaking a red rag in the face of an already mad bull. It excites, not pacifies. Even though the members of the executive committee succeeded in prevailing upon Mr. Baerman to withdraw his proposed American Red standard, he could not do so, as it is the sole right of the American Poultry Association, in body assembled, to do with it as it pleases, and this right will be asserted, whether or not the much discussed standard stays or goes. We do not blame Mr. Baerman for the recognition he has received; he is perfectly satisfied; but we do blame those of our executives who have caused this breach in the association's doings.

While on this subject we might add that in settling this affair it will be well to take in all "those schemers who, like Dick Croker, are working for their own pocket all the time." If Mr. Orr will help us in this matter we will gladly do what we can in identifying such persons, for to have Dick Crokers running around loose would result in leaving little for the balance of us poor stragglers in the chicken business to live on. This part of Mr. Orr's letter is fascinating, and deserves considerable thought from all fair-minded members, and if such a thing does exist why not stop it before it spreads to larger proportions? We can ill afford to have another reign of "hen fever" at this advanced date of civilization and poultry intelligence. It is time to stop monkeying with a buzz saw—and to settle down to business.

Here is a nut to crack: Supposing a bird wins four prizes, in four different shows, shown by four different exhibitors, who is entitled to the advertising thunder, and who will be certain of the eggs from this prize winning strain?

The weather is moderating in anticipation of the coming Pittsburg cyclone.

Some of our contemporaries seem anxious as to the fate of the American Poultry Association since the organization of the League of New England Poultry Associations at Boston last January. Now, there is no cause for alarm from this quarter, as the new organization is sectional, not national, in character. The purpose of the New England Association is the best in the world, and should do considerable good in that section. It forms an organization that will net good results both to the breeders and exhibitors, as well as to the managers of the shows in the whole of New England. We fail to see how an organization like this should cause a moment's worry from the admirers of the parent association of the fancy. There is hope for the latter, and each day brings us nearer to the millennium we so earnestly hope for. Instead of abusing the old parent we must take hold and help it forward in its progress, for no other organization could possibly fulfill the mission laid out for the American Poultry Association, no matter how hard it would try. We are nearer success to-day than we were yesterday, and it will not be long before our national body will be just as we would have it be. Be patient a little longer, dear people. Our organization has done so very much good for the fraternity in the past that we can well afford to overlook the few irregularities it has made in the present.

Flattery is very much like an egg—the longer it is exposed the more spoiled it gets.

Never try to incubate false ideas and bad pretenses.

The American Fancier occupies the unique field of being the fancier's paper. It is designed to publish the news of the land each week, keeping, thereby, the fancier and the breeder in touch with everything pertaining to the fancy. It is a fancier's paper and is read by fanciers everywhere. Under its present management we anticipate making it a star publication and a blue ribbon winner every time. No true breeder can really afford to do without The American Fancier in the future. It is the fancier's paper in every way, and the matter contained in its columns will not be found elsewhere. If you are not a regular reader it would be well to send in your subscription without delay, as back numbers can seldom, if ever, be furnished.

The unfortunate part of it all is that so many do not understand.

French chemistry has produced a plausible imitation of the ordinary egg of commerce, says the New York Herald. The shell is made with a blowpipe by a combination of lite and bismuth. The white is made with sulphur carbon and helf fat, and the yolk with beef blood and magnesia, colored with chrome yellow. One can well imagine digesting this combination, and we would recommend Prof. Wiley, of pure food fame, exerting his influence in suppressing the infringement on the rights of the hen.

Comments are flattering on our Gallery of Fame portraits. Congratulations are received daily on the striking likenesses and natural poses in which our artist has drawn his subjects. The one of Mr. Orr in this number is the third of the series of fifty-two which will appear in The American Fancier and The Feather during the coming year. This will be a collection of celebrities of the poultry world that will be difficult to surpass, and will compare favorably with any aggregation of stars the world has yet produced.

An ostrich feather is a beautiful ornament for my lady's hat. These plumes are pulled from the birds once in eight months, and it is just as painful to the birds as it would be to have your eye tooth extracted. Yet, my lady does not appreciate the fact that she is encouraging the most cruel and barbarous torture which man can inflict upon a bird.

The charge has been frequently made that the American Poultry Association was made up of "grafters" and "wire-pullers." This may be true in fact—yet some people must be kept busy no matter what else may happen.

The rapidly increasing circulation and prestige of The American Fancier prompts us to call attention to its advertising columns. No better field for the live, energetic and progressive advertiser of fine poultry and pigeons could be found than our medium. Our readers are buyers of choice birds at long prices; prices that make it worth while to raise poultry.

A Strange Proceeding.

Orrs Mills, N. Y., Mar. 6, 1905.

To The American Fancier:

I am in possession of a petition signed by members of the Executive Committee at Pittsburg, Pa., asking Mr. Baerman to withdraw his proposed standard for the American Reds, etc. The men who signed that paper must be very ignorant indeed, to think that by Mr. Baerman's withdrawing, their plans could be carried out; that by one swoop any statute on the book could be annulled. I can not conceive how men of intelligence could imagine such a thing. It is not in Mr. Baerman's power to annul the action taken at Minneapolis, even at the request of such intelligent men, who have signed that request. I sincerely trust that the action at Minneapolis will be sustained, thereby, in a measure preventing those schemers who, like Dick Croker, are working for their own pocket all the time, from stepping in when things don't go their way and upsetting the well-meaning, deliberate action taken at an annual meeting. I shall stand by the Minneapolis action if I stand alone.

Yours truly,
D. Lincoln Orr.

One of the old life members of the A. P. A. residing in the West, commenting on the editorial in the March issue of The American Fancier in regard to the migratory habits of the old society, writes: "Your reference to the A. P. A. is the best thing I have read. It is to the point and means something. Why can't we knock out the Shannon deal next time. We have got to do something to save the A. P. A. We might as well acknowledge this fact, and realize that it ought to be done by its friends."

Exactly, but to find the true friends of the American Poultry Association among its members is not such an easy matter. Still, it must be done, and the sooner the real fanciers in the association get thoroughly aroused and alive to the condition of things, the better.

Several other letters from prominent fanciers and members all voice the sentiment expressed by our Western correspondent, and the opinion is general that migration must be abolished and the A. P. A. run on a business basis at a fixed location. It is the only way to abolish false sentiment and careless legislation.

"Uncle Isaac" Felch, in the American Stock-Keeper, remarks:

"The law that breeds shall be exhibited in three generations and at three exhibitions where the A. P. A. meets as candidate for admission is the understanding, and supposed to be law, affecting new breeds under that ruling—not one of the rose comb Minorcas, rose comb Rhode Island Reds or Buckeyes have in spirit and fact been so exhibited. It matters not how many times they have been exhibited in local shows, unless three generations have been shown as candidates for admission, they can not be legally admitted. But legality seems to cut no figure with the A. P. A. in these days."

The only time American Reds have been exhibited was at Minneapolis. Had not the members there been misinformed as to the rules governing the admission of a new breed, no such action would have taken place at the Minneapolis meeting, and it is safe to say there could have been less haste in admitting Buckeyes had the full intent of the law affecting new breeds been thoroughly understood.

The Campine experience in 1893 at the Chicago meeting should have acted as a warning, but it seems some over-zealous members were only too anxious to get both the Reds and Buckeyes admitted to the Standard; the one due to a well prepared and carefully laid plan, the other to sentiment. What happened to the Campines is still fresh in the memories of members who attended the subsequent meetings of the American Poultry Association. History is likely to repeat itself in more ways than one.

Mr. Felch, in the American Stock-Keeper, expresses himself freely regarding rose-combed duplicates of varieties of fowls, and gives some pertinent reasons why this duplication should not be sanctioned by the A. P. A. He believes rose combs and single combs should compete together, as was the case with Brown Leghorns years ago. But he further claims Rose-Combed Brown Leghorns never should have been accepted as a Leghorn breed, their whole shape of body, comb and short legs being different, and that one act of the A. P. A. opened the way to the trouble now on hand.

He further claims that a man can today mate a Black Minorca hen to a Black Hamburg male and from the chickens he will raise in a single season show Hamburgs, Minorcas, and rose-combed Minorcas, and stands a chance of winning sixteen regular and pen prizes from chickens raised from a single pair. He winds up his article with the remark: "Delightful thoroughbred business, this! But this is modern poultry culture as fostered by the A. P. A."

"Uncle Isaac" might have gone further and added that these new varieties are fostered by many fall show managers. The whole trouble lies in the commercial end of the game. Cut off the revenue to be obtained at the shows, cause the demand for these sub-varieties to cease, and the bottom will drop out of the whole business.

It is true some people want novelties in the chicken as well as in the flower and vegetable line. This has led to extravagant claims made for anything new that appears in the horticultural or chicken world. Sooner or later these new comers find their proper place, and usually disappear from the public gaze, the survival of the fittest being a rara avis.

The incessant booming of these novelties causes many of the older and better varieties to fall by the wayside. Instead of seeing shows filled up with a large proportion of the standard varieties, we find almost seventy-five per cent devoted to the American classes, and at some shows the newer varieties in the latter outnumber the old favorites. Managers of shows are responsible to a certain extent for this condition of things. Glance over the premium list and note the liberal society and club specials offered on the new so-called popular varieties. Is it any wonder, then, that Polish, Hamburgs, Spanish Games and other beautiful varieties are conspicuous by their absence? There is no incentive in the way of inducements to breed or exhibit these varieties.

Judges are often to blame also, to a certain extent, for discouraging the exhibition of rare varieties. In the course of a conversation with a well known judge last season, he made the following statement: "I don't see what people want with breeds like La Fleche and Anconas. What good are they?" This is a sample of the profound opinions on such subjects held not only by the aforsaid judge, but by hundreds of other breeders, officers of shows and writers. To the class they belong, there is nothing of value in chickens outside of the American and Mediterranean varieties, and possibly the Light Brahmas.

As to La Fleche, they are and have been the popular fowl of France. In that country they are bred to the highest state of perfection for the table, the meat being exceedingly juicy, the skin white, the weight very large considering the fineness of bone. They are an absolutely distinct race of fowl, of surpassing merit, but being of black plumage have never appealed to American fanciers. The craze for yellow skin and yellow legs has blinded many to the intrinsic merit of this grand variety.

La Fleche are easily reared, very tame, and mature rapidly. The hens lay large, white eggs which readily command extra prices in certain markets. There is no trouble in hatching the eggs, the fertility being nearly as great as that of Leghorns. We remember selling several settings of La Fleche eggs in 1890, from which 24 chickens were hatched, and these formed the breeding stock on an island near Martha's Vineyard, Mass., where for a number of years large flocks were raised, the owner keeping them exclusively for table use, having been attracted to La Fleche during a three years' sojourn in Paris, France. Yet we are told that such fowls are of no particular use by men that ought to know better.

The Ancona is another variety of fowl that is not appreciated as it should be. It is one of the best egg-laying fowls in existence. When carefully mated the progeny is wonderfully even in plumage, the percentage of culls being very small. It is a handsome fowl when well bred, the mottling in some of recent English productions being a very uniform blending of black and white. The aim of English fanciers of Anconas is to produce an Ancona having diamond shaped white spangles on the ends of the black feathers, juse the reverse of the Silver Spangled Hamburg feather. The Ancona fowl is considerably older than some of the men that cry it down.

The 1905 supplement and mailing list of the Millville Poutry Farm Company, Millville, N. J., has just been isued, and is a business like and interesting publication. The success of the above mentioned company in the show room is well known to readers of The American Fancier. The manager and president, Mr. M. F. Delano, is long on experience in breeding and exhibiting, as well as an excellent judge of fowls.

A good principle draws ready interest.

T. E. ORR.

There have been quite a number of pictures published of Mr. T. E. Orr, Secretary-Treasurer of the American Poultry Association, but we dare say that never was one printed just like this one. This is exclusive, and portrays our Secretary in a life-like position. Mr. Orr has been a long time poultryman, and has accomplished considerable in this particular line. He is a breeder, judge and writer of high repute. For the past few years he has occupied the duplex office of Secretary-Treasurer of the American Poutlry Association, and has had much on his hands. The country is familiar with his work and we are glad to show this latest portrait of him to The American Fancier readers.

PRACTICAL POINTERS

The Fates have been kind to the Lenten observer. With the ushering in of Lent the supply of eggs has become more abundant and regular, and the price has decreased considerably.

Believing the public has earned some consideration at the hands of the retailer, after a generous patronage throughout one of the most stringent and high-priced seasons ever known in the egg business, we decided to turn benefactor and put the price on some grades at cost.

Having a complete file of American Fanciers, and not caring to risk their being lost or mislaid while moving to Spruce Farm, I bethought myself of a book-bindery around the corner. They bound them in book form for less than three cents a number—great scheme, will last a life-time.

The natural reproducing season is here, and will continue for three months. The highest fertility will be reached within this period, and the strongest chicks forthcoming.

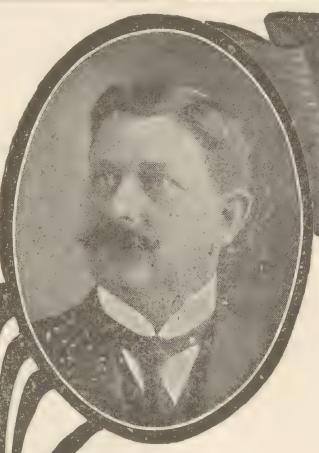
If our breeding operations come up to spring time expectations, what nice flocks of perfect birds we all would have. Prize winners would be as common as flies in mid-summer.

But the laws of breeding have made it impossible for such results to be achieved. Sometimes we get a pair of top-notchers from a mating and again none at all. Recently I saw it stated by an advertiser who had just won a first prize that he had seven more at home from the same mating that were just as good. It was a lucky thing for the other exhibitors he did not have them with him at the show.

Solid colored birds are the best for the beginner to commence with. Although I would not say the percentage of higher class birds would be larger, the percentage of passing fair ones would be far greater; therefore, more satisfactory and encouraging to the beginner.

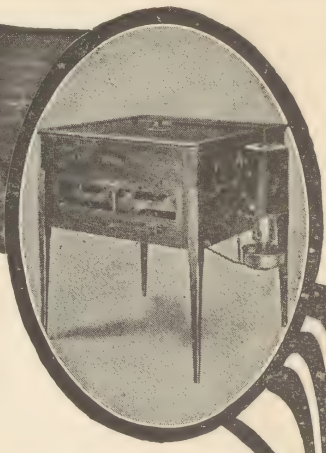
Only the old hands know the length of time it needs to mould a type and bring out the good points. For this reason a concentration of efforts is the most desirable and will bring earlier results. A few good birds rather than a bunch of ordinary ones.

Have one good pen made up of good material, rather than to divide it among two or more.



In breeding parti-colored birds, the shading and coloring of the different sections is very interesting. An intensely striped hackle or saddle, a good breast or perfectly even under-color, all go to arouse the fancier's enthusiasm to the highest pitch, and gives life and zest to the business.

Now that the season is just commencing, start out with a definite purpose in view and stick to it. Set your ideal high and keep it ever before you. We do not wish you worse than that you reach it.



The fancy poultry business around Manhattan is seething like unto a boiling caldron. The propogation of new breeds is not being overlooked. Possibly it is a good thing the A. P. A. meeting at Minneapolis is only a memory, or there might have been more trouble. A company is down here trying to sell eggs from a long list of breeds, among which we notice "Red Leghorns," "Silver Hamburgs" and "Pecan Ducks."

Worse than this, the old hen is to be brought under the ban of the law. An ambitious legislator has been so annoyed by the hens down around Canal street and the wholesale dry goods districts that he has prepared and introduced at Albany a bill to make it lawful to impound the fowls until their owner settles for any damage done to flower beds or tennis courts.—Howell.

Mr. E. G. Wyckoff, of Ithaca, New York, is trying 175 trap-nests to get the absolute laying record of all the hens at his poultry farm. There is more than one advantage to be gained by this. In the first place, the thorough testing of such a large number of eggs nests must prove to be invaluable, the result from which we shall be more than pleased to publish in the coumns of the FANCIER." Everything of this character is of untold value and of considerable interest to the whole poultry fraternity at large, and we trust all our friends and readers will send in similar information, so that we may circulate throughout the country.

MODEL Incubators

GROW IN POPULARITY

Because they Hatch Chicks Successfully

A new thermostat this season makes it the easiest regulated of all incubators.

The large market Breeders endorse this thermostat as follows: Truslow—"The new thermostat is a wonder." McFetridge—"The best acting thermostat I have yet tried." The Meadow Brook Farm—"Your new thermostat is more sensitive than any other tried, and will prove a labor saver." McEvoy—"No breeder can afford to run an incubator without this regulator." Evergreen Poultry Farm—"Very sensitive, and the largest possible scope of action." To induce a breeder who has a large investment in incubators to change from one machine to another, an incubator must be head and shoulders above its competitors in point of efficiency. The Model is so good that the following large plants have adopted it, discarding other machines: Crystal Springs Duck Farm, Oil City, Pa.; formerly 56 Cyphers, now 81 Models; Wm. H. Truslow, Stroudsburg, Pa., formerly 45 Cyphers, now 50 Models; Pine Tree Chicken Hatchery, Stockton, N. J., formerly 47 Cyphers, now 72 Models; W. H. McCormick & Son, Yardley, Pa., formerly 67 Cyphers, now 67 Models; Farrar Bros., Assinippi, Mass., large soft roaster growers, and many other smaller plants have changed over.

MODEL Brooders

Because They Rear Chicks Successfully

Perfected this season in point of detail, they have no equal at any price

To do the work successfully a brooder must be warmly constructed and heated in such a manner that there are no hot spots for the chicks to crowd against, such as a warm central dome or otherwise exposed heating surface. The air in the nursery as well as under the hover must be kept comfortably warm to keep the chicks from crowding.

The ventilation must be ample, and introduced in such a way that there is no draught on the chickens. A strong circulation of air is detrimental, in so much that it requires a much higher degree of heat to keep the chicks comfortable when the air is perceptibly moving. It must be well lighted, as nothing keeps a brooder so free from disease germs as light. In a dark, close, stuffy brooder chicks soon develop tuberculosis, familiarly known among poultrymen as "going light," one of the greatest causes of mortality among brooder chicks.

It must be roomy, as otherwise the chicks cannot properly exercise. It must be easy to clean and care for, as otherwise the attendant will neglect it. All these important features are found in the Model Colony Brooders as they are found in no other.

In this brooder the nursery is double-walled, insuring easy heating. The roof is covered with a layer of hair felt, making it sun proof; and tinned, making it water tight. It is ventilated by diffusion, the warm air passing gently downward through a burlap screen in the top of the hover. No perceptible air movement is felt by the chicks. The hover and nursery are amply large, and the exercising room is moderately warmed and very roomy, and the whole brooder is light and cheerful and easy to care for. This brooder has won more friends in one short season than any other brooder on the market, because it is easy to raise chicks in it.

The Following are Fair Average Reports on this Brooder

We used one of your Model Colony Brooders last season, and we found it very satisfactory in every respect. I think I would be safe in stating that it is the best brooder that we have ever used. It is not very often that we make a statement of this nature, but of the the brooders used so far, considering the health of the chickens and the amount of oil used, I think yours is superior to anything I have used to date.

Yours very truly,
W. R. GRAHAM.
Manager and Lecturer, Poultry Department, Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, Canada.

I am using 14 Model Colony Brooders, and they are simply perfection for outdoor work. I feel justified in saying that they will raise every chick committed to their care that can be made to live in any manner.

Yours truly,
W. H. HARDIN.
Supt. Valle Crucis Farm, Valle Crucis, N. C.

I wish to say that I used three of your Model Colony Brooders last season, and I have no hesitancy in saying that they are the best outdoor brooders that I ever put a chicken in. I take pleasure in recommending it, not to aid the manufacturer, but to aid and benefit those who want a practical brooder.

Very truly yours,
FRANK W. GAYLOR,
Manager Gedney Farm, White Plains, N. Y

I must say the Model Colony Brooders are just simply immense. They are the best we have ever used, and we have been using brooders for 25 years.

Very truly yours,
Hope, Ind. J. C. FISHEL & SON.

I think you have the right idea in a brooder. It does its work to my entire satisfaction. Have run one through three broods only losing one chick.

PIGEONS

A new administration.

Try one yourself if the old one was not satisfactory.

Amendments to the American Pigeon Club rules have been mailed to members to be voted upon.

Poles close for voting March 18th, 1905. Every member should vote and mail his ballot as soon as possible before that date.

A new show association has been organized under the name of The Evansville Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association. The officers are, president, E. H. Meyer; vice-president, Fred. C. Weiss; secretary, H. J. Renner; treasurer, C. H. Davis; executive committee, J. A. Bridges, H. Ellis, Otto Weiss, L. Mismeier, and Oscar Clark. The date of show will be announced later. It sounds good to us.

A greater number of specials were given at the past season's shows than ever before. The best evidence of popularity of the fancy.

The secretary of the American Pigmy Pouter Association reports a rapid increase in membership. In fact, it is rapidly assuming numbers double that of last year. More power to it.

Have you got your eye on the birds you will pair for the coming season? Study them well and make no mistakes. It would be a waste of time and the production of a lot of birds which will do nobody any good.

At its next meeting the American Pigmy Club has decided to give to each prize bird owned by a member a club ribbon, and it promises to be something of a work of art. We promise to know more of it in the near future.

We were advised of a visit of Mr. J. M. Skiles, of Pittsburg, for the inauguration, but while we anxiously awaited James with the desire to open—something—he managed to side step us.

We are glad to congratulate the editor of The American Pigeon Keeper on the birth of his second son, and we will have to retract our assertion of "a corner on brains." The editorial staff is growing apace.

A visit from "Buffalo" Jones, game warden of Yellowstone Park, was most interesting and instructive. He was on for the inauguration and a conference with President Roosevelt. He has motion pictures of everything that moves in the park, and can talk entertainingly of all the creatures under his care. We can promise our readers thrilling articles from his pen from time to time.

TheWashington Show project is gradually forming definite lines, and prospects improve with development. It seems to be a universal desire to have an annual fixture here, from the great number of unsolicited promises to exhibit by fanciers from all sections.

We have the pleasure to report that Mr. P. A. Scheid, the Parlor Tumbler man, of Lancaster, Pa., has recovered from a seven months' spell of illness. He was out for the first time on Washington's birthday, and is fairly on the road to good health.

The members of the American Pigeon Club will think they are getting a patent medicine advertisement when they receive the ballots of the amendments compiled by ten Chicago and Milwaukee members, and those passed by the last two annual meetings. It is quite a bunch of printed slips and altogether rather bulky, and the secretary says it was no play to get them ready and mailed, but he is healthy and is ready to go at counting and assorting the votes just as soon as they are returned. There is lots of interesting reading in these amendments, and matter that gives opportunity for deep and serious thought. It is hoped that no member will pass them over lightly, but study and understand them, for their decision will affect the showing of pigeons for years to come, and make an important chapter in the pigeon history of this country. So be very careful and vote according to your best judgment.

Judge Lang has sent in his report of Dunkirk, N. Y., Show. The championship certificates will be mailed in a few days.

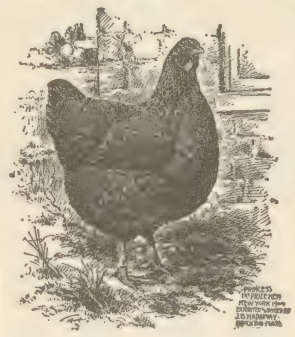
The judges' reports of the Boston Show have not yet been received.

Reports from some of the judges at Pittsburg are in, but not all. Certificates will be sent out as soon as all classes are heard from. So says the secretary of A. P. A.

There was trouble in the family of Thos. O'Donnell, a pigeon fancier of the District of Columbia, and now Thomas is building a new loft. It was brought out in court that O'Donnell partook of the "booze" inauguration day, and when he got home kicked over an oil stove belonging to his daughter Mamie, who procured an axe and proceeded to do things to her father's pigeon loft. This was getting too close to the "old man's" heart, and he handed Mamie one which left a bruise on her head.

A copy of the first issue of the Pacific Fancier has been received. It is very artistically gotten up, and treats interestingly of poultry, pigeons and pet stock. It is published at Los Angeles, Cal., and has all the earmarks of a comer. We wish it every possible success, and hope to become better acquainted with the management. It is our desire to keep in close relation with the leaders of the fancy in the West, and to obliterate the antiquated idea of animosity of the East for the West. We fear the shoe is on the other foot, but think they could be made to fit properly with better knowledge of each others. Let us try, any way.

Mr. Richard Whitney, of Dorchester, Mass., has made a wonderful record the past show season, winning 101 first prizes out of a possible 155 and 33 special prizes with his clean leg tumblers. We are of the opinion that this is a world's record. All the prizes were won in close competition.



Mr. Whitney is secretary of the American Tumbler Club, and has made almost as good a record in building up that club as he did with his birds.

We are informed with delight that Mr. D. H. Jenkins, of Indianapolis, Ind., has recovered from his recent illness, and is now able to take an interest in his Pigmys again. He was about to sell out entirely, and did sell quite a number, but decided to retain a breeding stud, and go after more honor and glory.

THE BUFF PLYMOUTH ROCK.

Pages of history have been written about the Wilson margin of this variety and their display and admission to the Standard at the Chicago World's Fair. "Honor to whom honor is due" is the watchword of the true fancier, and to the one who brought forth the original idea should go the credit, but to the army of fanciers and to the specialty club organized for their upbuilding should go the share that belongs to them for having completed the work and for bringing out of the rough model so complete and beautiful a fowl.

In telling of their origin in the Plymouth Rock Book, Mr. J. D. Wilson, who originated them, states that it was by "reading about the new variety of Buff Leghorns, in the Fanciers' Gazette, London, England, that strongly suggested the possibility of producing a Buff Plymouth Rock fowl too. I was at once vigilant looking over the various yards in this vicinity. After many disappointments in my researches I was fully successful in finding in a relative's yard a male bird that gave me great joy from seeing so typical a Rock. It was the result of a cross between the American type of Buff Cochin and a Light Brahma. He was a beautiful, even, golden buff color throughout, except his tail was nearly black. He had clean, yellow legs, small comb, etc., and weighed twelve pounds. I selected from the same yard two of the best hens having an even surface color and the least feathering on legs. From these birds the foundation of this most popular variety of the Rock family was produced.

"I raised that year about forty chicks, the result being beyond my most sanguine expectations. I selected two yards of very creditable ones from among these, I was puzzled over the amount of ticking that showed on their hackles, as the parent birds were perfectly free from that defect. However, I came to the conclusion that it was possibly the result of the Light Brahma blood that they contained asserting itself.

"The next season brought about a more satisfactory outlook, and they continued to improve until the World's Fair first-prize cock, hen, cockerel, pullet and pen were produced. Not any of these birds were ticked, and two hens were nearly solid buff. Of course, they had their defects. Some excelled in one section and some in another, no one specimen having the much-desired whole that was close to the enviable ideal. The advancement since their creation, reaching a point in breeding where not a bird shows any ticking or feathers on leg, with a uniform covering of golden buff plumage, is certainly phenomenal in so short a space of time as ten years.

In the World's Fair collection were several that now would hold their own against strong competition. The first-prize hen continued to win at Madison Square Garden, New York, until her death in 1897, and several from the pen were sold to an English breeder. Had I been told by some old reliable Buff Cochin breeder at the commencement so as to have strengthened my own convictions to breed to the Buff Cochin color solely, the present color lines in the variety would have been established two or three years sooner. Unaided by experience in breeding the buff color, I was obliged to grope my way along with but weak light on the correct color lines. After placing them in show rooms, the judges, critics and breeders so differed in their ideas as to bewilder. No harmony seemed to exist between them on an established shade of buff color.

"Is it not gratifying to know that they possess sterling qualities beyond any other new variety? I will now call your attention to what I have learned in my study about color, and how I have mated for best results. From my present experience, I would suggest that you do not use male birds in mating that are too deep in color, nor those containing solid white feathers in wings or tail. An orange tint of buff is sufficiently pronounced to correct any tendency to a pale lemon shade, and this is true after breeding for several years the standard golden color. Nor would I advise the use of a male with red wing, bows or coverts. I find male birds that carry a slightly deeper-colored hackle, back and saddle than breast and thighs, make very strong breeders. My preference, however, is for a male with continuous golden buff color throughout every section."

Quite an article was published in the columns of this paper a short time ago from the pen of a true fancier and breeder, who expressed surprise at the bad color of shanks seen upon the winning Plymouth Rocks at the New York show. This is too often true; the badly colored shank is becoming entirely too plentiful in the show room, not only upon Plymouth Rocks, but upon other breeds as well. This should not be, and above all, never should a greenish olive or willow shading be seen upon the shanks of a buff fowl. Some of the new varieties of Wyandottes, and the Partridge Plymouth Rocks as well, have almost black shanks. We have seen blue ribbons go to specimens with awfully dark shanks at St. Louis, New York, Boston and Chicago, and read of these being the best ever shown. Of what value is the clause that says: "Shanks other than yellow or dusky yellow shall disqualify;" also in Buff Plymouth Rocks, "shanks other than yellow." Should shanks that have a willow or olive cast win under such rules? We think not, and one is as injurious to the breed and the public as the other.

One of these dark-shanked blue ribbon winners went to England some time ago. One who saw this specimen requested the writer to inform him as to whether our Standard, the judge or the breeder was to blame for his friend being defrauded of his money. We rather think the trio should bear the blame for closing their eyes, partially at least, to this grave fault. Of all things, stick close to good Plymouth Rock shape and perfect color of beak, shanks and plumage of your Buff Plymouth Rocks.

There is a grave fault that is quite too often overlooked in our Plymouth Rocks, and that is comb. There is one thing absolutely certain, and that is that bad combs count far more against a specimen under the score card than by comparison. Badly shaped combs, double heels to combs, and side sprigs are quite too often seen upon winners. This is a grave fault that should be checked by judge and breeder alike. Nothing has stronger influence or is more quickly transmitted to the offspring than is a bad comb upon a male bird. Frequently we hear the expression: "That cockerel has a bad comb, just like his sire." It is best not to be tempted into breeding bad shape, bad combs, or bad color into your flock. Discard all that is bad and cling to that which is best for your breeding yards.—McG.

FIRST PRIZE WHITE LEGHORN COCK.

Minorcas at Chicago.

With reference to W. F. Maunden's very fine report on Minorcas at Chicago, while giving a very detailed description of the Blacks, and which will no doubt be much appreciated by the breeders of that variety who exhibited there, still I am certain the two exhibitors of Whites, who were the victims of the judge's ignorance, would have liked to have had such an experts opinion of the individual awards in that variety. At the same time I am sure he was not aware of the fact that sixteen of our competitors' birds were not weighed, the judge saying he could tell near enough by lifting them, or that there was a protest entered in my behalf, the deciding of same being a complete farce. Not only must the judge have been ignorant of what constitutes a good Minorca, but he was equally so of what the Standard says regarding judging by the score card. Now, while not wishing to get free advertising by stating these facts, might also mention a sample of the methods that obtained at this show:

A pullet with a score of 95½ got first over one owned by H. C. Meiselbach scoring 95¾. Knowing that it is the true fanciers desire to see the best birds win, regardless of who owns them, I can confidently state that this was not the case in the White Minorca classes at late Chicago show.—W. Dunne.

Never try to make another fellow bear the brunt of your short-comings.

Poultry on Town Lots.

So much has been said of late with reference to poultry raising on town lots that it has attracted considerable attention. Some of the best egg records from laying hens have been gained from small lots of poultry kept on village lots. An acquaintance of ours, whose name we could mention, has a small poultry plant on the rear end of his city lot, where from twenty to thirty-five Minorca hens are constantly kept. Another has an equal number of Brown Leghorns. These two men have for years contended for supremacy in the egg producing quality of their hens. Not being able to produce their own laying hens they must depend entirely upon care and feeding for good results. Two years ago the egg record of both was kept, and they furnished almost 46 dozen during December and the first half of January. From that until the first of March it ranged between 46 per cent and 53 per cent, being kept by weeks. These eggs were sold to the near by neighbors. The lowest price obtained for them was 50 cents per dozen. This only adds stronger proof to the oft-repeated statement that good hens well cared for do the best work.

These flocks of hens were fed as follows: All the neighbors had two small tin buckets made out of 5-pound tomato cans. All table scraps of these several families were saved in these buckets and the two enthusiasts gathered these up night and morning, exchanging a clean bucket for the one with the scraps. These scraps were all passed through a bone cutter and mixed with bran, middlings, and a little ground oats, into a very dry mash. in addition to this the hens were only fed with wheat, as a grain, which was scattered into a deep litter, thereby making the hens hunt for it. The vegetable diet in the table scraps, which consisted of cabbage, turnips, beets, potatoes, some celery tops, etc., seemed to furnish a sufficient amount of green food, as the yolks of the eggs were a good normal color for the Mediterranean breeds.

Sad But True.

Two hens with but a similar red;
Two combs that are as one.
One is in the standard now;
The other is on the bum.

THE REDMAN.

Pure Breeding is the Best.

Alma Cole Pickering, of the Northwest, is an earnest admirer of pure bred fowls for the farm. She is absolutely positive, after many years' experience, that nothing pays so well as does the pure bred poultry on the farm, providing it is properly looked after. We quote her as follows:

"If the farmer will not take proper care of common poultry he is not a proper person to become the custodian of well bred ones, for these more profitable breeds have been raised to their present paying standard because of the more highly sensitive organism, an organism that will respond to selected food and human care, and comparison of merit in performance when estimated in the greater profit, very often ten more eggs each in a flock of fifty hens every month, should be an incentive for considerate care for egg-laying breeds, and should convince every thinking person that the keeping of common hens may be an expensive luxury."

We consider much of this absolutely valuable, except that we do not say that the farmers who have not, or who are not, taking proper care of common fowls should not become the custodian of better ones. We are in favor of lending our aid to the matter of poultry-keeping everywhere, and we hope to see the time in the near future when the farmer will take as good care of his poultry as do the fanciers themselves, and they will, as soon as they learn that so many advantages and so much profit can be gained from so doing.

Like the writer quoted above, we can not realize that there is any valid excuse for anyone to keep poorly-selected mongrel flocks of poultry, but they do, and as long as this is a fact we have a duty to perform, and that duty is to distribute knowledge that will teach the people how to care for their poultry as they should. When the whole country has turned into such a grand egg-producing locality as are some of the sections of California, the farmers will begin to raelize that there is a poultry Eden for everyone who seeks it.

The State Department of South Carolina has started the movment for a State poultry farm to demonstrate the production of market poultry and eggs for profit. It looks as though the South would furnish the winter fresh egg supply of the future.

BROWN'S BUDGET

The original "American Reds" were Indians, and the Rhode Island woods were full of 'em. Are the American Reds that are now causing the "war dance" in the poultry arena after scalps too?

Special meetings would not be necessary if special attention was given to the general proceedings of the A. P. A. at the regular meetings.

The continuous delay of the new Standard illusrates some very unpleasant proceedings of the giddy A. P. A.

When an association arrives at the stage where it has to depend on the report of a stenographer engaged by others for its official record, it is time to call for a new deal or a hearse.

Glad to note that Mr. Henry Hales, the well-known Dorking veteran is enthusiastic on his favorites. The shows the past winter have probably had better specimens of the Dorking family than were ever exhibited in this country. The well bred Dorking is a very handsome fowl, and their utility is unsurpassed.

What is the use of having "pit game" classes in the shows? No judge can determine which are the best—the specimens alone can decide it—so what is the use of making guesswork awards.

Variety in foods is always desirable, but without the observation of other things, without good judgment, success may not always be forthcoming. The little things that promote comfort and content with a flock are always as important factors as the food.

The man who is searching around for some very cheap eggs for hatching, will feel as cheap as the price he pays for them when he sees the results about next fall.

It is a question in the mind of the writer whether clover or alfalfa meal is as valuble as the clover or alfalfa cut and steamed or cooked. In the latter form, fed in winter, it contains all the valuable constituents contained in the clovermeals, but supplies in addition the bulky food so especially desirable when grain and concentrated feeding is naturally necessary. In California alfalfa is cut and cured in less than half a day. It is almost as green when cured as when first cut. Such alfalfa ought to be excellent for poultry.

Plant plum trees in the poultry yard. They will make desirable shade, and the poultry will keep the curculio in check, so that resulting plum crops in time can be yearly depended upon. Varieties known as wild goose plum are rapid growers and very hardy. The name naturally suggests they ought to be good for the poultry yard.

The man who does not take interest enough in his poultry to study their language is more of a dollar man than a poultry fancier.

Hens have more sense than they are usually given credit. My flocks always respond to a certain "sho' fly" whistle call. The other day I had some setters in the big hen house I wanted to feed. The whole flock seemed to know it and were on hand. I simply held my hands together over my mouth, to deaden the sound, and in a low tone gave the whistle call. It acted like magic. Their heads were up in an instant, then away they scampered, and I closed the door against their intrusion.

Whew! Jeewhillikins! What's the matter with March? Last Sunday was a scorcher—75 degrees in the shade—and two down-pour thunder-storms in the evening. Some hens stretched themselves in sun baths, and others diligently hunted for the early worm and greens. It was a "little too-previous" weather

There is material in the coal cinders that the fowls seem to enjoy. The ashes make good dust baths, and the cinders are fine to scatter about in the low places in the yards.

When you have built up a good reputation on the quality of your poultry, don't commence to depend more on that reputation than on the quality of your products. Don't imagine you can send out any old thing because you've got a reputation, if you do you will soon have another reputation "that is different.'

The best way to fight vermin is to keep them down. That is, commence with remedies and conditions before the vermin gets a chance to start. Cleanliness is the best means of prevention. Keep the hen houses clean. Once a week is one-seventh part of cleanly conditions. My houses are thoroughly cleaned every morning. It is less trouble and more satisfaction to me, and probably to the flock.

"Mornin' Miss," said a spruce book agent burdened with books under his arm, "where's your parents?" Pa is in the chicken yard settin' posts; ma's in the hen house settin' hens; brother Tom's in the chicken yard settin' out plum trees; the hired man's settin' on the fence there settling a dispute with a nabor; grandma's in the settin' room, and pa said if a book agent called to set the dog on him." "Well, good day miss—darndest set I ever come across yet."

Make notes of all disagreeable conditions that exist around the houses and yards this spring. Aim to have all such troubles remedied for another season. No use for the same tribulations another season.

In building new poultry houses, whether the ground is level or not, it is always best to have the foundation a little higher than the surrounding surface. Fill in and then lay the floor. This plan insures dry conditions in all weather.

Mistakes should always be made object lessons. A wise man does not make the same mistake twice. Unfavorable conditions often tax one's patience to the limit, but when they are overcome something of value has been accomplished.

Watch the cockerels when they are penned together. There may be some very promising ones that are be "cowed" by the others. If there is such, they should be taken out and placed where they can have a better chance to develop.

It is the active hen that is healthy and produces the best eggs for all purposes. Keep the hens scratching to promote health. Because they can now run out and roam around is no sign to stop the litter-scratching exercise. When there is plenty of grass and the weather warms up a bit, then there will be little if any need of the litter work.

BOYER'S TALK

Farm Experience.

While we do not have much faith in the belief that some hens are sterile, we do know from past experience that the eggs from some hens will hatch better than from others. If a hen is healthy, and is properly fed, we doubt if it will ever be sterile.

We shall keep an accurate account of the incubation of the eggs from this promiscuous lot of hens and pullets, which will be noted in season.

We feed a mash in the morning made of equal parts, by measurement, of bran, ground oats, corn meal and middlings, to which we add 15 per cent ground meat, and 5 per cent linseed meal. To this mixture we also add a gallon and a half of broken stale bread, soaked in hot water. Every other morning we give in addition a half pail of cooked vegetables mixed in the mash. Hot water is used in mixing the mash.

In feeding the mash we use a large iron spoon, and give a spoonful to every two head of stock in the flock. In other words, eight spoonfuls to each pen, excepting the Brahma, which we give six.

The noon meal varies, principally roots, fed raw, or green cut bone.

The night meal consists of equal parts of cracked corn and whole wheat. We allow a good handful for each bird in the pen.

The fowls are quartered in scratching shed houses, with muslin fronts, and during all the severe weather they did not suffer from the cold. But we kept them busy during the day.

The houses are cleaned daily.

For strong fertility, four male birds are used for every three pens, the changing being made every Wednesday and Saturday night. To be plain, cock No. 1 starts in pen No. 4; cock No. 2 in pen No. 5; cock No. 3 in pen No. 6, and cock No. 4 is kept in a cage in another building. The next Wednesday, cock No. 4 is taken out of the cage and placed in pen No. 6; cock No. 3 is placed in pen No. 5; cock No. 2 in pen No. 4, and cock No. 1 goes in the cage.

In a separate building we have three tiers of cages, numbering twenty-six in all. These cages are regularly numbered so that we can keep a record of what birds we place in them. The cages are two feet square and two feet high, and have the front door made of wire. The cage part is constructed of light box stuff; two or three times a week we clean out each cage used, and thoroughly disinfect with Sanitas, after which we litter the floor with sifted coal ashes or sand. The cages being roomy and affording plenty of light, fowls do not suffer from the confinement.

These cages are used for all sorts of purposes. The top row contains our change breeding males, the middle row surplus males, the bottom row ailing fowls.

If a fowl shows a sign of cold or is hurt from fightin or some other cause, or is mopish, it is at once taken from the general flock and placed in one of these cages and promptly treated. By this timely work we easily cure these slight ailments, and never have occasion to hunt up roup remedies or fool with contagious diseases.

It is a noted fact that these disasters with contagious diseases almost invariably come to the amateur or beginner. They are a penalty for inexperience. When the beginner learns how to properly house, feed and care for his flocks he has no further trouble. The beginner shuts out too much fresh air, allows drafts of air to come into the house, especially by means of ventilators, he feeds irregularly, allows the manure to accumulate, does not treat the slight ailments, and is not mindful of the small details of the work.

The poultry business is not made up of hard, muscular labor, but it is hard work nevertheless from the fact that it is the continual sameness, and requires constant attention. The beginner starts out with great enthusiasm, goes along swimmingly until he strikes the first stumbling block. If he is weak kneed he is at once completely knocked out; but if he has pluck and grit, he quickly arises and goes at it again. The man who never gets the "blues," he is always in a cheerful mood, and who loves the work and is determined to win, is the man who is bound to succeed.

Just the moment the faint hearted beginner becomes discouraged he comes to the conclusion that there is not even a half living in poultry farming, and it was only a year ago that he figured out how quickly he could make a fortune at the work.

Getting back to our trap nest talk, the questions are often asked, "how many nests should be placed in a building?" and "how long a time does it take to attend to the traps?"

We find that one nest for every four hens is sufficient, but one for every three hens would be better.

The time required to look after them depends upon circumstances. If the houses are conveniently located, and the man does not stop longer at each nest than is really necessary, he can take care of fifty nests in five minutes. Our plan is to give a quick glance at each nest as we go along. With such nests as the Ideal, the hens can be seen without opening the nest. If we notice the hen is still sitting on the nest we pass on until we come to one where the hen is trying to get out, We open the nest and take the hen, look to see if she laid (hens don't always lay when they go on a nest), and if she has we look at the number of her leg band, let her go and mark the number on the egg. If she has not laid we let her go, close up the nest and go on to the next one. At night we go over these eggs and credit the hens on a record sheet.

In the morning when we open the houses we look at the nests to see that they are all right. About ten o'clock we make our first trip around, and then go every hour until three o'clock in the afternoon. At feeding time we take another look, and also at night when closing up.

All told it takes about an hour a day to tend to these nests, and it is an hour for which we are well paid, when we consider that we know which are our best hens and which are our poorest, and enables us to get rid of such hens as are not worth their feed.

This we call true economy, for with a less number of hens we are able to get the same, if not better results, at a less cost.

It is hoped that these trap nest notes and farm experiences will be a guide to those who are embarking in the poultry business. They come from a ripe experience, and will be faithfully written.

Quality of Eggs.

Mr. Wittman states that after the sale of his Brown Leghorns, a month or ten days elapsed before his family began to protest against the use of store eggs. He admits that he was somewhat disappointed himself, and the fact that they had for so long been accustomed to plenty of good fresh, clean-fed eggs, finally drove him to the purchase of some more poultry. Columbian Wyandottes and other kinds were tried, but finally he has settled down to the Silver Pencilled Plymouth Rocks, a pullet of which variety was illustrated in the January issue of The Feather. Mr. Wittman lays great stress upon one point, and that is that the quality, the real, delightful flavor of the egg depends largely upon the manner of feeding. He has become a stickler for clean-fed eggs, and the poultry that produces the eggs for his own table are as carefully fed and the food as carefully selected for it as for himself. Herein is a great secret that may be well considered by all who keep poultry for the production of eggs. It is quite possible to have quite good flavor or very bad flavor in the eggs. Musty, ill-flavored food, or foul water, too much cabbage or turnips, will change the flavor from good to bad.

"The Feather and The American Fancier both to hand," writes one of our regular subscribers under date of March 6th, "both greatly improved. If their present excellence is continued you will get all the business."

SATURDAY, MARCH 25, 1905.

According to our new plan of publication there will be no issue of The American Fancier on Saturday, April 1st, but instead the April number of The Feather will be sent to each subscriber of The American Fancier. As has been explained there will be forty numbers of The American Fancier published a year, and twelve numbers of The Feather, making the total of fifty-two papers, or one paper every Saturday. If any subscriber should not wish this arrangement we would be pleased to hear from him.

President Holden states as follows:

"If we are to have an illustrated Standard, the work should be of the best and the few months waiting does not signify when quality of illustration is considered."

Undoubtedly Mr. Holden is right, but in the name of all justice to the publishers of poultry papers and the rank and file who must pay for the Standard, why doesn't the Association and its sub-committees come out honestly and flat-footed and say the Standard will not be complete and ready for delivery until next September. The point is not one of giving sufficient time for efficient work, but this continual disappointment as to date of delivery is what is making all the trouble.

When in New York last week we interviewed some of the poultry people with reference to the meeting of the American Poultry Assiciation at Pittsbrug, in April, the admission of new breeds and the issuing of the Standard. While there was some comment as to "child's play" and individual advantages in the matter, all seemed to be willing that the matter should be settled. No one understands why the "Buckeyes" and the "American Reds" were both admitted to the Standard. Many were willing to admit that there might be indeed a different description of shape for the Single Comb and the Rose Comb Reds (American Reds). Not one thought that Pittsburg was the proper place for the meeting, and many were outspoken in the statement that it looked like a deal. To all these objections we are able to reply that the President selected Pittsburg, thinking it was equally situated between the East and West. The question as to the admission of the breeds was settled at Minneapolis. The breeds themselves must prove their quality if they are to be continued in the Standard. We believe that the other question will finally be settled to the satisfaction of all, but the delay in the issuing of the Standard is one that seems to be causing considerable restlessness and complaint. Sufficient time should be allowed to get the Standard out completed in proper form. After this has been accomplished "Hands Off" should be the cry for many years.

It is evident that what was everybody's business at Minneapolis is nobody's business elsewhere.

Which is correct "pile" or "pyle?" is a question frequently asked. In the standard of Perfection it is spelled "pyle," and this is correct. This word, like "pied," owes its derivation to the variegated plumage of the English pye or magpie. The change in orthography is believed to have been by the folowing steps: "Like a pye," "pye-like," "pyly," "pyle." The word has no connection whatever with the idea of "piled," and this is the best reason in the world for making the change and avoiding that confusion. The term "pyle" has been translated into foreign languages and associated with the idea of massiveness. We cite as the authority for the above the well known game fancier, Dr. H. P. Clarke, who furnished the information to us several years ago.

The silly goose phrase is being handled recklessly of late.

An egg many times is the beginning and ending of it all.

Mr. Higgs, of Virginia, says there is always room for improvement, and that poultry can be greatly improved throughout the Southern States. This is undoubtedly true. All that is needed is a good strong determination to give a little more care to the poultry, and the breeders will be successful, but as long as the poultry of the South is neglected as it has been so long in so many localities, they will suffer in this direction; but if they will merely give one-half care to the poultry in the South as has been bestowed on the poultry in the North, it will not be long until the South sends their egg product to all the cities of the North.

Standards are made—sometimes.

The principle features of The American Fancier will be continued in The Feather, making it absolutely one combination of publications under the same management and progressive influences. The Gallery of Fame will appear regularly in each publication, as will the editorials, and other departments, and we earnestly desire that subscribers of each publication will become subscribers to both, and we make this special combination to our readers of one dollar for both papers a whole year.

One should not worry along in the old rut when a newer and a better way is safer.

In our March 11th issue we gave a brief summary of the American classes exhibited at the fall and winter shows of 1904 and 1905. This week we will take up the Asiatic classes. It is not a pleasant task to record facts that involve the intelligence and good intentions of the fanciers of America. But the naked truth is far better than a white washed excuse. The Asiatics have been neglected and allowed to grope around in the mire of oblivion.

The stately Light Brahma, a most beautiful fowl, once the peer of all others, where is it today? It is true that at Boston and New York, and perhaps a few western shows, we still see this grand fowl represented, but in what numbers?

Look back to the great Light Brahma shows held at Boston under the auspices of the New England Light Brahma Club. We remember seeing over 400 Light Brahmas at one of these shows. Where are they today? The fine exhibits at New York are dwindling in numbers, and why? The answer is, craze for new breeds. And where, we pray, is the Light Brahma inferior to new breeds? As an egg layer, when well bred, it acknowledges no superior in winter laying. In fact, records of 155 eggs to 170 eggs per capita for a flock of hens and pullets have been recorded, and whee is the bird that excelled these records? Yet the entries at our shows are not what they should be if this magnificent fowl and Dark Brahmas are in the same boat. A magnificent breed, the delight of true fanciers is, outside of New York and England, a forgotten member of the feathered race. How can the exquisite penciling of this fine fowl ever be forgotten? The Silver Penciled Wyandotte has assumed its garb and is reaping a deserved reward, but the Dark Brahma will live when other breeds have been forgotten.

Cochins next. What a fall of the mighty! We remember the big showings at New York and Boston. Where are they today? The Buffs are still in evidence in smaller numbers and of good quality, and we may add, better than ever. But why so few exhibitors? The Partridge Cochins, thanks to the Mitchells, Baylies, Butterfields, Stellwagens, etc., are still the beauty brights that attract the real fanciers. But we want more of them. The Black and White Cochins are the rara avis, and more's the pity, for both are fine types of the Asiatic race of fowl. Shades of Nichols and Anderson, rescue them from oblivion.

Mr. John L. Cost and Mrs. C. M. Maynard were married at Hagerstown, Md., on Thursday, March 16, 1905, by the Rev. A. B. Statton. Mr. and Mrs. Cost will reside on Mr. Cost's farm. The American Fancier wishes them unbounded happiness in their new life.

Never close your ears to the truth.

A. P. A.—Its Errors.

Nine-tenths of all the dissensions that have from its beginning caused men to disrespect the old association have come about by a disregard of its constitution and its by-laws, and these remissions have dotted its history all along the line, until men figure to control the voting in its meeting, with no regard to its by-laws or constitution.

The admission of Rose Comb R. I. Reds, American Reds, or Ohio Reds can not be legally admitted to the Standard if strict adherence is given the Standard. First, neither one of them has been shown at three of the annual meetings of the A. P. A. with a petition for their admission with a standard description in keeping with the present standard. That law was made that three generations might be exhibited showing the ability of such new breeds—ability to produce 50 per cent. or more of its progeny in the likeness of themselves. Have either proved to the satisfaction of the society that they can do this? Again, when the Single Comb R. I. Red was accepted it shut out all birds or breeds that were of similar character; a mere difference in comb does not make a breed.

Now it is Black Plymouth Rocks. Will the A. P. A. be foolish enough to make them an acknowledged breed, when we have the Black Java? That was no more or less than a Black Plymouth, a blanket that covered every black reversion that came in the Plymouth Rocks. I have been looking for just this thing ever since the growing evil of giving black barred Plymouth Rocks the premier positions in our poultry exhibitions. Let these aspirants for Black Rocks be told to regulate their specimens into the breed that they belong to, the Black Javas, and let the A. P. A. cease to endorse freaks that only rob the regular and accepted breeds of their protection and birthright.

Yours truly,

I. K. Felch.

Why do hens lay is a question that has recently been put to some experts. The answers to this are many. Some say that if the eggs are in them the hens must lay them; others say that as soon as nature deposits shell on the egg, that egg has got to be laid. Others say that some hens will lay and some will not; while others claim that in spite of all you may do a hen will not lay if she does not wish to. It is probable, however, if hens are properly fed and cared for, so that the yolks will be formed and grown to perfection that these must be constructed, finished as a complete product, and laid by the hen. If the hens are not properly fed so that the yolk will be produced and deposited in the ovaduct the eggs will not be produced, but as certain as the hens are fed and the conditions in winter are the same as in summer, the eggs will be laid, and as certain as the food product and the care does no fulfill all these conditions, just that certain are we not to have the eggs.

The March issue of The Feather is a wonder. It contains a world of information on artificial incubating and brooding. Everyone interested in poultry should see this issue, which has attracted so much attention on all sides. The April issue of The Feather will be devoted to the growing of chicks.

Ira C. Keller, Prospect, Ohio, recently shipped a fine consignment of Golden and White Wyandotttes to Austtralia and another to New Zealand. Mr. Keller has shipped a great many Wyandottes to these far-away countries during the past fourteen years. A few years ago he sent a Golden Wyandotte cockerel to Australia, and the bird proved a winner at thirteen shows, defeatng many English birds, including Crystal Palace winners.

The demand for White Plymouth Rocks has exceeded the wildest hope of the most enthusiastic fancier. From all sides comes the statement of inability to fill orders. This speaks volumes for the standard-bred poultry business; no one ever heard tell of there being so brisk a demand for mongrel-bred fowls. Standard bred polutry is destined to move the world along the line of better things. For all who keep and cultivate this kind of stock there will always be some who prefer the other kind, as all processions have their stragglers, and the fog can not be obliterated.

Mr. D. J. Lambert states that in his experience of twenty years it was never as easy to make money from the keeping of poultry as it is at the present time.

The Wisconsin Agriculturist devotes seven full pages of a late issue to poultry, in honor of the recent addition to their editorial force of Mr. William W. Storms, of Racine. This special issue starts with the following statement:

"Wisconsin, with its gently sloping hills and valleys, abundant streams, healthful climate and loamy soil, is an ideal state for the raising of poultry. It seems a shame to ride through this glorious State of ours with all the blessings the Lord has given us to make a grand success with poultry on the farm and see how sadly it is neglected. There is not one farmer in fifty in Wisconsin who cares for his poultry as he does for any of his other stock, and very few make any special study of the methods best adapted to secure the best results. It is true there are a few farmers giving it a trial by getting pure-bred males and improving their stock in that way. This is all very good as far as it goes, but we want more of it, and more of it among our farmers especially."

Mr. Walter Hogan, of Minnesota, will soon tell our readers how to produce the 200-egg hen. He is passed the guessing period; he has this down to a sure thing.

In writing of The Busy Little Hen, a Westerner states, "That when crops were destroyed by drought or floods or untimely frosts and hard times were on the farm, the busy little hen came to the rescue, and from insects and worms and little scraps of waste she manufactured her eggs and provided food, clothing and good cheer for the family and, by her example, taught us to be patient and faithful and not to despise the little things.

The new association at Newfoundland, New Jersey, will send all their eggs to market wrapped in paper. On these papers will be recorded the day the egg was laid and the farm from which it comes. On each wrapper is printed: "Should this egg prove unsatisfactory in any way, you will confer a favor ir you will kindly mail this cover paper to the Association with your complaint." This is a strong move in the right direction, and should result in high prices for their products.

When Parker was a boy John B. Gough the temperance orator was an exhibitor of fine poultry at the Worcester Show. He and Upham, with Philander, was Parker's e rly day teachers in the art of poultry culture. The wheel of fortune seems to be turning backwards to those good old days, for so many men of prominence are showing an interest in poultry growing.

Secretary Wilson, U. S. Department of Agriculture, has issued a notice to importers, announcing that further importations of egg products in a dry state, preserved with boric acid or with other preservatives, with the exception of salt, sugar, vinegar, or wood smoke, will be regarded as a violation of the provisions of the existing law. The notice says that "refusal to admit such importations will not be requested of the Secretary of the Treasury on invoices consulated prior to January 21, 1905.."

Texas growers are planing for an extra large crop of turkeys this year. That success may crown their efforts is the prayer of every loyal American who prefers the turkey rather than the eagle, about Christmas, at least. Just turn to and urge the turkeys to work overtime for an increased product, for if they don't do better many of us will forget the delicate flavor of this most attractive bird that has outgrown the statement made that is was too much for one but scarcely enough for two. What we want is plenty of the large enough-for-a-family kind.

There is a certain sense of duty we owe others that should not be overlooked.

Mr. E. A. Day, of Newfoundland, New Jersey, has completed the organization of The North Jersey Poultry Association. This is to be a Union of producers for business benefits, one member to gather for shipment the product of the entire colony, and dispose of it to the best interests of all. This a movement in the right direction and might well be imitated in other localities.

Mr. A. A. Parker, of New Jersey, sent to this office for inspection a diploma that was awarded to Master A. Parker at Worcester, Mass., March 7, 1872, for Superior Gold Laced Bantams. This bears the signature of F. W. Chamberlin, Secretary, and was awarded to young Parker prior to the establishing of standard names for fowls in this country. At that time Worcester was the stamping ground for the most ardent fanciers of the time and from these Mr. Parker took his first lessons in chicken culture. Their example started him along the lines of training that makes the successful producer of the best.

One of our correspondents writes that he has sixty turkey hens from which to furnish eggs for hatching this Spring. He states that each one of these hens must lay twenty eggs to fill the orders in sight. There has not been so great a demand for turkeys to be used for breeders and for turkey eggs for hatching within the knowledge of any grower as there is at the present time. The one thing most essential for successful turkey growing is strong, healthy, non-related stock from which to get the eggs for hatching.

In telling of his experience in importing fowls and eggs, Dr. Phelps, of Glens Falls, N. Y., said that for ways that are dark and tricks that are vain the heathen Chinese is not alone, for he has close competition in other lands than China. We know of others who would gladly add their testimony to this statement. Why can't fanciers on both sides of the pond deal fair with each other?

Vermin is sometimes found in the least suspected places.

H. V. CRAWFORD.

This snap-shot of Mr. Crawford was taken just as he was entering the Herald Square Show last December, and it portrays him in an attitude of happiness that is seldom seen. Everybody knows or has heard of Mr. Crawford through his connection as secretary of the greatest poultry show on earth, and he is the only gentleman to our knowledge who has kept up the vast undertaking of running so stupendous an event as the Madison Square Garden Show for the period of sixteen long years. For this reason we are pleased to have all our readers better acquainted with him, and give his happiest in this issue.

PRACTICAL POINTERS

As I recently asserted in these notes, the grower who is near enough to his market to be his own middle man and retailer, is the one that is going to get the price and reap three profits on one sale. Only yesterday I saw personally an example of this kind, enacted right here in New York City. In the northern end of the city there are still several establishments where farm life is daily portrayed in all its rustic glory, which has not been crowded out by home-seekers, or closed by the Board of Health.

At the one I visited yesterday, although covering perhaps less than an acre of ground, and this nearly all occupied by buildings and sheds, in addition to the dairy for the milk, from which, in all the viciousness of the swill-fed product, the consumer paid two cents a quart extra. We find a regular poultry farm of several different breeds, incubators in operation, mated pens, pens for layers, pens mated to produce table crosses, young chicks in the brooders, a kennel, pigeons in the lofts raising squabs, isolated birds being fattened for market, in fact, a concentrated gold mine, albeit an unsightly one.

For the eggs a uniform price of fifty cents a dozen is charged the year round, for the table poultry, which I will admit is well conditioned before killing, 20 to 25 cents a pound is received.

The food for all the live stock is collected principally from the hotel kitchen, cheap and conducive to egg-laying, and in this case I judge a prime factor towards securing fertile eggs. Aside from the market egg trade, there is enough demand for eggs for hatching purposes to warrant the proprietor in paying as much as ten dollars each for breeders.

In the course of time, these old institutions will be wiped out, but the principle can be applied on a larger scale and under more wholesome conditions.

While nosing around the poultry market I came across some fowls destined for the pot which still wore the band of the St. Louis Exposition. How have the mighty fallen! Life is very uncertain, it is the Waldorf-Astoria dining room tonight, and Beefsteak John's restaurant on Eighth Avenue tomorrow night. There is a Mare somewhere in Missouri pulling a plow,—condemned too hastily,—and of which all trace is lost. Her colt was sold at auction for twenty thousand dollars.

That the chicken business went a continual round of gaiety was reimpressed upon my mind by the drummer's experience, which he tells this way: "Contracting the chicken fever I went to a big gun and brought some White Leghorns. Later they contracted the egg-eating habit, so I wrote for advice. One suggested that I get a bone cutter and feed them raw-cut bone, which I did and nearly killed myself turning it. The next suggested placing porcelain eggs on the floor. They used them to form bowling clubs just to get up an appetite for the real eggs. Another recommended filling an egg with cayeuue pepper, but this only acted as a tonic. Still another suggested that I cut up newspapers in small bits and scatter them around the floor. I spent one whole night at this without result and then I gave up, being convinced the only real money there was in those hens was what I had put in myself, and retired from the fancy."

Every chick hatched will not be a prize-winner; there must be some culls, but it is to be regretted that beginners through lack of experience breed these culls. I have in mind a breeding pen of Barred Rocks that recently came under my notice. They were hatched from eggs direct from one of the largest and foremost breeders of Rocks in America. In the yard were two cockerels, one a fine one, the other a cull, and the cull was boss, selected no doubt for this very reason, and just as surely will breed him a lot of stock worth a shilling a pound.

Since being localized the poultry show of the Orange County Fair has lost outside interest. The dates have been pushed ahead and this will no doubt further cut down the display of young stock. Supt. Minturn succeeds himself, which is right, as he knows the business and is not afraid of hard work. This means much to the exhibitors, as there is not much satisfaction in sending birds even to a country fair for a lot of greenhorns to experiment on.

HOWELL.

ODDS & ENDS

The question, "which is the most practical hatcher," must be of interest to every user of an incubator. To a man who is running two or more hatches each spring the addition of a small percentage in the results secured—five or ten chicks or ducklings more for each hundred eggs set—adds dollars to the profit side of the investment. A machine that is economical with oil, and requires little of the attendant's time to operate, is, in addition, a money saver. Both these claims are made by the manufacturer for the Model Incubator.

To make a claim and to prove it to the discriminating poultryman is quite a different matter. Mr. Cyphers seems to be proving his claim very effectively by the verdict given by the large market poultry breeders who have tried the Model and passed on its merits.

Last season when Mr. Cyphers put his new machine, the Model, on the market, with the new system of air circulation giving more perfect ventilation than in his older designs, the public were at once interested, and since that time poultrymen the country over have been watching the progress made with it. Early the past fall a new patented thermostat was added to the Model equipment, which gives a much larger movement. The greatest variation in the Model, between the highest flame the lamp will carry, and the lowest one that will hold the temperature, is less than one-half of one degree. This insures great accuracy of regulation with the least attention, and every poultryman knows that the more even the heat the better the hatch and the stronger are the chicks or ducklings which come out.

Every chick or duckling added to the hatch means thirty to fifty cents profit; every half hour saved each day in the care of the incubators means that the year has been lengthened half a month, which can be devoted to increasing the output. Briefly, the market poultryman must have the best to secure the full measure of profit on his labor and investment. Those of our readers who have not secured one of this season's catalogues of the Model Incubators, will do well to address Mr. Chas. A. Cyphers, (317), Henry Street, Buffalo, N. Y., who will be glad to furnish it free of any charge. It tells something of the profit side of the different branches of the poultry business, and Mr. Cyphers is preparing a comprehensive lesson on each branch for the benefit of his customers. This will undoubtedly prove of great value to those who secure it, coming, as it does, from one of our greatest authorities on artificial poultry raising.

Through a mistake the advertisement of Donovan & Burns in our last issue was made to read "choice small peas, crop of 1905." This, of course, was an error, as there has been no 1905 crop yet, the correct statement being "choice small peas, crop of 1903."

It's not a question nowadays whether incubators will hatch chicks. It's a question which one to buy. There are so many makes on the market that it is hard to give advice on any one special make.

Looking at the history of artificial incubation in America from a critical standpoint, the name "Prairie State Incubator" stands identified intimately with its successive stages of progress.

The Prairie State Incubator is easy to run. A few minutes' attention every morning and night is all it needs. It is easy to learn from the book of directions how to test the eggs, how to turn and air them, how to get big hatches from fertile eggs, how to avoid the mistakes made by others, and to profit by their successes. The Prairie State needs little attention. It attends to itself. Its regulator is trustworthy and unvarying. It prevents an interior change in temperature because its sensitiveness forestalls variations. The Prairie State system of ventilation gives warm, fresh, vitalized oxygen to the eggs without endangering them by puffs of cold air either in center or corners.

The Prairie State Catalogue is a library of information on every point for the education of beginners or experts in poultry raising. Anyone can get one free from the Prairie State Incubator Company, Homer City, Pa.

Sixteen years ago the Harvey Seed Company of Buffalo, N. Y., began handling Poultry Supplies. They made it the corner-stone of their business to handle everything poultry people needed and to sell at reasonable prices. They insist that the quality of any article that receives their stamp of approval shall be unquestionably high, and that it shall never vary but always be the same. Each year of these sixteen has compelled this concern to let out another hole in their belt. They have steadily and constantly grown and expanded until today their trade extends to every town and hamlet of the United States, and the name "Harvey" is known wherever a rooster crows or a hen cackles. The Harvey Seed Company are the originators of some of the best poultry feeds that are on the market today, and their feeds are good, sensible feeds —the result of experience and the improvements that these sixteen years have demonstrated were advisable and desirable.

CANADA

The Eastern Ontario Poultry Show held at Ottawa last week closes the show season as far as Ontario is concerned. I understand that the entries were short 300 as compared with the previous year, which no doubt can be attributed to the lateness of the show. Many of the breeders, having their breeding pens together already, do not feel disposed to disturb them, seeing that it will delay hatching operations for a considerable time. We understand arrangements are under way whereby the management hope to select more favorable dates for next winter's show.

The scoring system was adopted in making the awards at this show, and from all accounts it was not a howling success. In any event the association was unanimous in discarding this method and adopted the comparison system for their next annual exhibition.

There is another factor which has materially lessened the receipts of this association. Two years ago the government made a liberal appropriation for the purpose of erecting a new exhibition building, but, unfortunately, last winter, as it was nearing completion, the building collapsed. Last season it was reconstructed, but, unfortunately, about a month ago, it again collapsed; this time destroying their new wire coops which were all in position ready for the show. This latter was certainly a severe loss, and put the association to no end of trouble. Other coops had to be procured and arrangments made to hold the show at the exhibition grounds, consequently the attendance of visitors materially decreased.

A new building is to be erected this coming summer, to be centrally located, and it is to be hoped they will not have a repetition of the disaster that has followed them the past two seasons.

A number of Western breeders exhibited at this show with their usual success, many of the coveted honors coming westward.

Billy McNeil was evidently much in evidence at Ottawa by the number of high-scoring pasteboards he returned with. Who said he was quitting the fancy? I guess not!

Quebec City is holding their poultry show this week, March 4-17th. Bismark is placing the awards. The management has evidently been waiting for the new edition of the American Standard. Patience, thou art a jewel.

We understand the Toronto Industrial Exhibition Association contemplate erecting a new up to-date $10,000 poultry building to accommodate their ever-increasing poultry exhibit. With a liberal prize list and an up-to-date building, the management deserves the liberal support of the fancy that has been accorded them in the past.

Did it ever occur to you that some pretentious fall fair associations offer more prize money to "any old lady" for building a pair of socks or for darning same, than they do to the poor poultry breeder who labors long and patiently with many disappointments in producing a 96-point chicken? Such an institution exists within a radius of a thousand miles of London City Hall. Get in the band wagon, gentlemen.

Billy McNeil says that a score card in some judges' hands is like a baby with a razor—you cannot tell where they will cut.

PIGEONS

Advertise. Advertise artistically. Advertise truthfully. Advertise continually. Advertise in The American Fancier. Advertise every old way, but above all, live up to it.

Mr. A. D. Brown, of Washington, D. C., says: "I sold $600 worth of pigeons from a $1 ad. in The American Fancier."

The secretary of the American Pigmy Pouter Association, Mr. E. C. Duffy, 308 E St. N. E., Washington, D. C., reports a continuous growth of the club. The following members have recently joined: Chois Georgino, Washington, D. C.; A. M. Ingram, Laurel, N. H.; J. M. Skiles, Pittsburg, Pa.; Geo. Josenhaus, N. Y. City; John B. Quinn, Worcester, Mass.; J. S. Blodgett and Kenneth Blodgett, Brookline, Mass, and Wm. A. Hosey, Wellesley Hills, Mass.

BLACK JACOBIN.

Several others have made application, and undoubtedly will be among the next lot of recruits. The Pigmy is fast taking the place of his big English ancestor and becoming one of the most popular breeds of fancy pigeons, and well he might. He certainly has no superior.

We are in receipt of "Squab Culture," by Mr. C. E. Twombly, a neat little booklet full of "straight tips" and necessary "pointers" for the squab raiser. The story is told in Mr. Twombly's own crisp, concise and straightforward style. Though brief it contains more information than any book we have seen twice its size. In fact it is nothing but good hard "horse sense," and shows the writer knows what he is talking about and that he learned it by experience. "Squab Culture" has a place in every squab loft and the "boss" should see that it is in it.

We thank the secretaries of the specialty clubs for their kind and prompt attention to our requests for by-laws, standards and list of members. After their use in The Feather and Fancier we shall bind them in book form for future reference, the volume ever occupying an esteemed position in our library.

"I'm a 'beginner.' Will you kindly give me the names of the best books on the breeding of fancy pigeons, and descriptive, giving their characteristics in each variety?" To the above inpuiry we reply: "'The Feather's Practical Pigeon Book,' also 'The Pigeon Standard,' and 'Pigeons and All About Them.'"

Mr. Albert F. Kiepper, of Milwaukee, had his lofts almost entirely burned out. He lost five lofts containing carriers, Barbs, Nuns, Priests, Archangels, Owls, Turbits, Suabians, Dragoons and Fantails. In all there were about 950 birds burned and smothered. It was really a holocaust. The lofts burned were in one building. Another building containing about the same number of birds escaped.

The polls closed Saturday night for the vote on the American Pigeon Club amendments. The vote was so light that it is evident the majority of the members want no change. Hence the amendments were defeated.. A full report of the vote will appear in next issue of The Feather.

We are pleased to acknowledge the following complimentary notices from the leading exclusive pigeon journals of the country, "The Pigeon News" and "The American Pigeon Keeper," and though we admit they are a bit too flattering, we will try to come as near as possible deserving the high regard as expressed.

"The Pigeon News" says: "We are pleased to announce that Mr. E. C. Duffy, Secretary of the American Pigeon Club, will in the future conduct the pigeon department of The American Fancier weekly and The Feather monthly. That he is competent to hold such a position no one will question, and we expect to have lots of new ideas for the betterment of the fancy sprung upon us in the near future. Mr. Duffy is a man of progressive ideas, and there is no doubt he will do the fancy some good in his latest undertaking."

"The American Pigeon Keeper" hands this to us, gilt edged: "We learn that Mr. E. C. Duffy, of Washington, D. C., has been chosen editor of the pigeon department of the American Fancier-Feather combination. We know of no one better fitted to fill the position than Mr. Duffy, and feel sure that the future of this part of the publication is doubly assured by the choice of a man so able and competent."

Mr. Edward Beer, formerly of Chicago, has moved to Boston, where he will make his home. He is taking a deep interest in pigeon matters of the East. He brought his collection of Orientals with him.

A new flying association has been formed in Buffalo, N. Y., and will be known as the Cold Spring District. At the last meeting the following officers were elected: President, H. Scholler; vice-president, C. Weinert; race secretary-treasurer, J. H. Lehman; secretary, Eden Maag; race committee, Messrs. Noeiss, Weil and Lehman. Arrangements have been made with other districts whereby races can be continually "pulled off" at varying distances.

The Herald Square Show lost $256.43, without paying premiums, which we regret. They claim the low entry fee and cheap admission were the causes. The admission may be blamed, but entry fees should never be counted on to do more than pay premiums. President Kyle and Secretary Gauss are game, however, and will hold another show this year, during Thanksgiving week, and promise to pay last and this year's premiums at the same time.

A novelty in Homer racing has been arranged by Mr. F. C. Hersey, Jr., race secretary of the Wellesley, Mass., Federation district, in the way of relays. He has perfected plans for the first relay race ever flown. It is to be from St. Louis to Boston, 1,200 miles, via Louisville, Kentucky, Cincinnati, Ohio, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, Washington, D. C., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, New York City and Pawtucket, R. I.

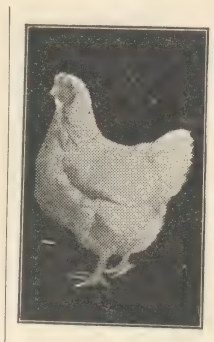
Six birds from Louisville will be shipped to St. Louis for the start, each carrying a message holder containing a letter. Six Cincinnati birds will be shipped to Louisville, to be liberated on the arrival of the Louisville birds from St. Louis, and so on to the end of the race, when the letter will be delivered. The race is down for early in June, and should be very interesting to all Homer racers.

At the annual meeting of the Eastern Fantail Club, the officers for 1905 were elected as follows: President, T. A. Havermeyer; vice-presidents, Messrs. Stanton, Orinck, Blair, Rowland, Hay; secretary-treasurer, H. M. Pockman.

It was decided that the club offer gold medals at the next annual meet for the best bird in each of the following classes: White, Black, Blue, Red, or Yellow saddle, any variety or color, all to be 1905 bred. It was also decided to mail voting slips for judges and place of meet, July, 1905.

Mr. R. E. Riley, of Atlanta, Ga., and Dr. John Hurdes, of Albany, N. Y., were admitted to membership, making a list of twenty-seven members, which is a very good showing for the club.

The date for mailing voting slips in above report, July 1, 1905, is a move in the right direction, but we think it moved too far; that is, for most of the specialty to follow the example. It is the proper thing to have these matters attended to early, for the benefit of the club and the show association, but we think July 1st a trifle too soon.



We do not know the understanding between the Eastern Fantail Club and the show secretaries, but if they are going to give the latter a bid for club meet they will have to put it off about three months, for the show secretaries do not wake up and begin to unwind until about October 1st—September 1st at the earliest.

The Boston Show judges' report has been received by the secretary of the American Pigeon Club. Championship certificates are being prepared and will be sent out this week.

THE PITTSBURG MEETING.

The special meeting of the American Poultry Association called at Pittsburg, Pa., April 4, resulted in one of the most representative gatherings of the old society in its history. Many of the old warhorses were present and quite a number of very promising colts. There was an earnestness and determination on the part of each individual member that argues well for the future of the American Poultry Association. Members are becoming convinced of the fact that something must be done to put the society on a sounder basis with modern business methods in conducting its affairs. That was one grand result achieved.

The following members were in attendance:

D. Lincoln Orr, Orr's Mills, N. Y.; T. E. Orr, Beaver, Pa.; F. L. Kinney, Chicago, Ill.; Miller Purvis, Freeport, Ill.; Theo. Hewes, Indianapolis, Ind.; J. F. Shureman, Chicago, Ill.; W. C. Pierce, Indianapolis, Ind.; G. M. Curtis, Buffalo, N. Y.; R. H. Essex, Buffalo, N. Y.; W. I. Burgess, Indianapolis, Ind.; T. F. McGrew, New York City; Geo. E. Howard, Washington, D. C.; M. F. Delano, Millville, N. J.; J. H. Drevenstedt, Johnstown, N. Y.; H. H. Blackman, E. G. Wyckoff, W. C. Denny, Ithaca, N. Y.; Phil Feil, Andover, Ohio; F. D. Baerman, Dunellen, N. J.; E. F. Wickey, Chicago, Ill.; Lester Tompkins, Concord, Mass.; D. P. Shove, Fall River, Mass.; C. M. Bryant, Walleston, Mass.; A. F. Cooper, Homer City, Pa.; J. P. Hilldorfer, Pittsburg, Pa.; B. J. Hill, Beaver, Pa.; Julius Frank, Akron, Ohio; D. E. Hale, Sewickley, Pa.; Harry Shannon, Pittsburg, Pa.; W. Hillabrandt, Pittsburg, Pa.; G. R. Haswell, Circleville, Ohio; Dr. N. B. Aldrich, Fall River, Mass.; W. A. Reed, McDonald, Pa.; T. L. Pillow, Allegheny, Pa.; E. H. Selden, Verono, Pa.; J. A. Jackson, McKeesport, Pa.; B. Warren, Evans City, Pa.; C. P. Clogger, Johnstown, Pa.; W. H. Mazon, Castle Shannon, Pa.; D. E. Hale, Sewickley, Pa.; Mrs. Frank Metcalf, Warren, Ohio; Frank Metcalf, Fred Cook, Pa.; Paul Clymer, Ithaca, N. Y.

The Hotel Antler was headquarters, and several days before the meeting the different clans began to arrive. The Rhode Island Red contingent headed by Major Bryant, of Wollaston, Mass., with Lester Tompkins, Dr. Aldrich, Daniel P. Shove, as aids, arrived Sunday morning, as did F. D. Baerman, the American Red champion, and rival camps were struck. In the evening Geo. E. Howard, T. F. McGrew, and D. Lincoln Orr made their appearance. This advance guard spent a very quiet Sabbath. It was the lull before the storm.

Monday was spent in shaking hands with the new arrivals, and incidentally in preparing for the campaign to follow.

By Monday evening nearly every member reported, and the famous "Raid of the Reds" was discussed from a strictly carmine hued standpoint. Even the air was red.

Promptly at 10 A. M., Tuesday, the members reported in the meeting room and President Orr called the meeting to order by reading the call for the special meeting. He also declared this meeting illegal. That was the first gun fired and it hit hard and made everybody on the alert.

Mr. Bryant asked the chair for reasons, which President Orr declined to give. Mr. Bryant moved to appeal, second and third by Messrs. McGrew and Howard. Mr. McGrew asked by what right the president declared his own meeting illegal. The Chair again declined to give reasons and was supported by Mr. Wickey, from a parliamentary standpoint declaring motion out of order. Mr. Wyckoff made the point that a special meeting can not be held during a recess. Mr. Howard admitted all this and said the officers were appealed to as to the legality, and held that a motion should be sustained and should not be lost by a little technicality. Mr. Baerman cited authority for illegality, but wanted the matter of the admission of the American Reds at Minneapolis sifted to the bottom and thoroughly discussed informally. Mr. McGrew made a plea stating that President Orr assured him that the meeting was legal, that the members came to adjust matters, that right must prevail; and further remarked that all attempts by parliamentary subterfuges to throttle debate should be laid aside. Mr. Wickey said he did not wish to throttle debate. After much legal and technical sparring Mr. Baerman acknowledged the right of the president to call the meeting.

The President thought the American Reds were legally admitted, and incidentally intimated that two members of the publication committee refused to go ahead with the publication of the Standard because they did not deem the American Reds legally admitted. Mr. Bryant claimed the call legal; if illegal, it could be remedied some other time, and gave numerous precedents for the call of similar meetings. Mr. Kinney complimented Messrs. Wickey and Baerman in defending the chair, but considered the meeting legal.

Mr. Wyckoff thought a good way to get out of the difficulty would be to adjourn the meeting and resolve it into a committe as a whole and avoid illegality. Secretary Orr expressed the wish that the President could see his way clear to state his opinion, and was of the opinion that American Reds were just as legally admitted to the Standard as other breeds in the past, and claimed a notice must be served on the secretary sixty days prior to a call for a meeting if anything was wrongfully admitted, and paid his respects to the highway methods practiced. Mr. Curtis then arose and defended the two members of the publication committee, stating that they (Drevenstedt and Curtis) did not block the Standard. Proofs were sent which Secretary Orr declined to O. K., and further, the latter had no standard for Buckeye ready for the committee to pass on, and said also that the secretary tried to prevent the call of the meeting, and claimed it was in order for the President to declare the meeting illegal, and that the decision could be appealed. If the President on February 13 thought that the meeting was illegal he should have notified members of such a fact. He did not believe in filibustering tactics to delay discussion.

Mr. McGrew expressed the opinion that he did not like the secretary of any organization to contort the meaning of its constitution, and that everything could be done at the Hagerstown meeting that was done at Minneapolis, according to parliamentary law. He also thought the two members of the committee of five should have gone ahead by orders of the association and sustained President elect Holden's opinion that time should be taken to perfect a good Standard.

Mr. Baerman then arose and asked the President whether the American Poultry Association was bound by any particular set of parliamentary rules. The President answered "No." In answer to the question whether general rules should be applied the President answered in the affirmative. Mr. Curtis called for the question. Mr. Baerman again cited parliamentary law to declare the meeting illegal.

Mr. Hewes made a warm defense of the two members of the publication committee, declaring that they did what was for the best interests of the American Poultry Association and were entitled to thanks from the members of the latter.

Secretary Orr thought it ill became any man who was at Minneapolis to question the Secretary's motive regarding the admission of the American Reds. Mr. Kinney claimed that this was a legal meeting, and called for a vote. The result was that 14 voted to sustain the chair; 27 voting against.

Mr. Hewes then moved that the action taken at Minneapolis admitting American Reds to the American Standard of Perfection be rescinded. This was seconded by Mr. Bryant. Mr. Baerman objected and made a point of order on the call of the meeting, read by the Secretary, which the Chair sustained. Mr. Bryant appealed from the decision of the Chair. Mr. Baerman brought up parliamentary and technical points in favor of reconsidering in place of rescinding, claiming that the meeting was called for one thing and it now proposed to do another. Mr. Shannon offered an amendment to change Mr. Hewes' motion to read "reconsider" instead of "rescind." Seconded by Mr. Baerman and accepted by Mr. Hewes. Mr. Wickey claimed the motion was out of order.

Mr. Curtis asked for the roll call, which the Chair ordered. Forty-four members responded to their names, and three proxies of specialty clubs were held by Mr. Wyckoff. After much technical and legal sparring Mr. Delano arose and objected to such quibbles. Mr. Wickley then stated that he was at Minneapolis, and believed in getting the question before the house, so moved that the vote by which American Reds were admitted be reconsidered. Seconded by Mr. Wyckoff. Mr. Bryant made a substitute motion that the vote at Minneapolis be "rescinded," which led Messrs. Wickey and Wyckoff to state that they would withdraw their motion if Mr. Bryant insisted on his substitute. Mr. Howard was sustained on a point of order. A long discussion ensued over the words "rescind" and "reconsider," and much legal wisdom and other brands was let loose, which was enhanced by some cross-fire motions that made the Chair say: "It seems that a good many members are trying to get the Chair in a hole. If the Chair hesitates it is because he wants to do the right thing, and not being a parliamentarian, hardly knows how to decide in some cases."

Mr. Curtis insisted on a ruling by the Chair, and after much discussion regarding the power of a body to call a special meeting to reconsider an action taken at a previous one, the Wickey - Wyckoff motion was under fire. Mr. Baerman cited numerous authorities, including Reed, Roberts, etc., and the legal fog and parliamentary sparring became more and more in evidence, so much so that many members were becoming rather anxious to get at the real and vital matter before the house and discuss fowls and not legal terms and parliamentary usages and customs.

Miller Purvis then startled the members by stating that he came further than anybody to attend the meeting, and thought there was not anything done at Minneapolis to reconsider. Mr. Bryant enlivened the situation by saying there was plenty of ground for reconsidering the action taken regarding American Reds, and wanted a legal motion so that it could be discussed most thoroughly. After several more quibbles regarding the word "full" or "fair" in the Wickey motion, Mr. McGrew came to the rescue of the tired legally fed members and asked for an adjournment until two in the afternoon, which was gracefully accepted, especially by Mr. Julius Frank, of Ohio, who said something about there being too much law in this country any way.

The afternoon session started on time, and Mr. Hewes moved to proceed to reconsider the action taken at Minneapolis by the association in admitting the American Reds, to conform to the call issued by the committee. This was seconded by Mr. Kinney. Objected to by Mr. Baerman, who brought out a satchel full of authorities and more legal and other kinds of food was served up. Mr. McGrew cleared the fog away by quoting Thomas Reed and from Cushing's Manual to sustain the motion, but Chair sustained Mr. Baerman's point of order, to which Mr. McGrew took exception. On a vote being taken the motion was passed.

Mr. Baerman asked the question whether the American Reds could be brought up here for admission the same as at Minneapolis. Mr. Howard replied in a happy vein, dwelling on the supreme majority of the law and the right of every man to have a free discussion and a fair field, and made a strong plea that something should be done to regulate and straighten out the matter. Mr. Wyckoff then read the call for the meetinng and stated that nothing further could be done than the reconsideration of the action at Minneapolis. Mr. Baerman wanted the meeting to go into an informal session. Mr. Curtis asked that the Rose Comb Rhode Island Red breeders be given a chance to state their case and also Mr. Baerman. Mr. Purvis objected to the Rhode Island Red case being reopened.

In the motion to reconsider it was agreed to strike out the word "proceed." Another fine point not so well taken. Just about this time another long exhibition of word juggling ensued, Secretary Orr being an easy leader in this art.

Mr. Clymer then gave some interesting legal opinions in a very clear and concise manner. Cushing and Roberts at this time had a ten round engagement without gloves, both parliamentarians being handled with considerable force. Mr. Baerman then made the claim that he entered at Minneapolis Rose Comb Rhode Island Reds to be admitted as American Reds.

The motion to reconsider was then voted upon and carried by a vote of 21 to 7, some not voting. In this connection Secretary Orr made the claim that he did not believe that Mr. Hewes had voted in the affirmative at Minneapolis. Mr. Hewes replied: "Your own minutes show a unanimous vote." Secretary Orr still claimed that this did not prove that Mr. Hewes had voted. Mr. Hewes replied that he did vote in the affirmative. Mr. Bryant then took the floor and prefaced his remarks on the Rose Comb Rhode Island Red statement of the case by desiring to have everything done to prove to the world that every right and privilege has been granted to both sides in presenting their case. He proceeded then to read from a duplicate copy of the proposed standard for American Reds and asked Mr. Kinney where the original copy of the American Standard was. This could not be answered at the time.

Mr. Wickey then sprung a motion to adjourn the meeting to Hagerstown, and decide there whether to admit the American Reds or not. President Orr left the chair and called on Mr. Kinney to preside. The original motion at Minneapolis made by Mr. Wickey, admitting American Reds, with Standard for same attached, was amended by Mr. Curtis to have Rose Comb Rhode Island Reds admitted to the Standard, but not as American Reds. This was conceded by Mr. Hewes. Mr. Wyckoff objected on the ground that it was not legal to do this at this meeting. The chair would not rule and awaited the return of President Orr, but asked that in the interim both sides would state their claims. Mr. Curtis asked Mr. Baerman to take the floor and present his case, and also stated that a breed rejected at Minneapolis could be admitted at this meeting.

Mr. Baerman then produced 125 petitions from Rose Comb Rhode Island Red breeders, favoring American Reds and made the usual plea of his movement to purify the breed, and also claimed that the Rhode Island Red Club did not want a Rose Comb Red Club. He then read Samuel Cushman's letter regarding American Red Standard, also one from R. G. Buffington, claiming the latter to be the first breeder to push Rose Comb Rhode Island Reds and both endorsed the American Red Standard.

Mr. Selden then asked Mr. Baerman to define the difference between Rose Comb Rhode Island Reds and American Reds, but it was with some difficulty that this was explained, the main point of distinction being the shape, one approaching the Barred Rock, the other the Wyandotte. It seems as if a horizontal shaped Wyandotte was about what the American Red should be like.

Considerable personal matters regarding judging and breeding American Reds were then brought to light, and the astounding statement was made that no breed or variety breed fifty per cent. true to type and color. This hypnotized everybody except Editor Essex, who wanted to combat it. Mr. Bryant then took the floor and in a clear logical way presented the claims of the Rose Comb Rhode Island Red breeders, and to back up his opinions threw down petitions signed by five hundred Rhode Island Red breeders.

A recess was then taken until 7.30. At the evening session, after a few preliminary remarks regarding certain points in a motion not acted upon in the absence of President Orr, Mr. Drevenstedt offered the following resolution, which was seconded by Mr. Howard:

"Whereas, The motion by which the American Reds were admitted to the Standard has been reconsidered;

"Resolved, That it is the sense of the members of the American Poultry Association, assembled at this meeting, that the consideration of all questions concerning the admission of the American Red and Rose Comb Rhode Island Red breeds to the Standard of Perfection, be postponed until the next annual meeting."

Carried by a vote of twenty-six to four, Messrs. Delano, Curtis, Essex, and one other lonesome voting against the resolution.

This resolution brought forth considerable argument and comment before it was finally passed. Mr. McGrew then presented a resolution, the substance being that the publishing committee proceed at once to complete the new Standard, omitting therefrom both the American Red and Rose Comb Rhode Island Red. Secretary Orr took this resolution from the President's hands, arose and made some very caustic remarks against the presentation of such a resolution. President Orr then declared the resolution out of order. Mr. McGrew, then in a powerful speech, arraigned the Secretary of the American Poultry Association, because of his presumption in trying not only to run his own office in a way not calculated to do it creditably, but in addition had the temerity to run all offices, and, in fact, the whole Association to suit his tastes. It was a rather strange wind-up to a very strenuous meeting, but the sense of the members present was distinctly in sympathy with the speaker. The meeting then adjourned.

The publication committee then went into session and completed the Buckeye Standard, and O. K'd the final sketches of Mr. Sewell. The Standard will be pushed rapidly, and will be in the hands of breeders and exhibitors before the opening of the show season next summer.

Prior to the motion to refer the whole matter to the annual meeting, Mr. Curtis made a motion to substitute the Rose Comb Rhode Island Reds as a variety under the Rhode Island Red Standard in place of the American Reds as admitted at Minneapolis. President Orr ruled this motion out of order. There was considerable discussion against his ruling, but no appeal was taken.

A Poultry Press Association was organized. Mr. Geo. E. Howard, of Washington, selected as president, and J. F. Shureman, of Chicago, as Secretary. Messrs. Purvis, Shureman and Bates were appointed as a committee to draft a constitution and report the same at a future meeting.

THE SETTING HEN AND HER YOUNG.

In setting a hen never force her on the nest. If she is right broody she will be only too glad to start in the work. Every morning at a regular time give the hen fresh water, and also see that she has a good supply of whole corn and grit. In handling setting hens, do so very carefully. Some hens will stand rough treatment, but the majority will not.

A cross hen, that is, one that will pick at you if you reach towards her while on the nest, generally makes the best setter.

In case the nest becomes befouled, at once clean out the nest, carefully wiping off the dirt from the eggs, and putting new litter in the nest.

It pays better to set the early brooder hens than it does to break them up.

To break up a broody hen, an easy plan is to pen her for several days in a coop by herself.

In cleaning eggs, always hold them steady, as sudden jerks or twisting may injure the germ.

Our favorite nest for a setting hen is a barrel laid on its side, in which we place several large shovelfuls of dirt. Placed in a shed they make a protected nest during cold weather, and a cool nest when outdoors. It is a mistake to use any kind of nesting material that may have seeds in it, as it is apt to make the hen scratch it up.

More harm than good is done by sprinkling eggs during the incubation.

Nests should be large, which will prevent the hen from rubbing against the sides in trying to turn around. If the hen is of a nervous disposition, the less you visit her nest the better it will be.

If possible set two or three hens at one time. At the end of the week test out the poor eggs, and give the good ones to one or two hens. The hen just relieved of her eggs can then be reset. Keep a close record of the setters, time they were given eggs, number of eggs given, kind of eggs, date of test, number of infertile rejected, number of chicks hatched, and number of deaths while the hen is brooding them. In this way you will know the sitting qualifications of the hen, the fertility of the eggs, and the vitality of the stock.

Provide places of shelter for the hen and her young, so that they may get out of the sun or rain.

An excitable hen will as a rule have excitable chicks.

When the hen with her young begins laying, she is about ready to give up her family. When she grows tired of them she will pick and drive them when they come near her.

For the first few days, keep the hen and her young indoors, as the chicks require hovering more than anything else. During a heavy rain storm, drive the hen and her young indoors.

Asiatics are excellent setters, but, as mothers, they are rather clumsy and apt to trample upon their young.

Throw whole wheat once a day to the hen and her young, giving a mash the rest of the time.

Before the hen is given her young, it would be best to dust her well with insect powder. When the hen is with her young, it is a good plan to dip a sponge in kerosene, and then squeeze out all the oil you can. Rub the feathers of the hen well with the sponge, especially on the breast and under the wings. Repeat this weekly.

THE MARKET DUCK.

Ducks cannot stand filth; both their runs and their houses should be cleaned at least once a week.

The drinking vessels must be deep, so that the ducks can get their heads under water. If they are unable to do this, they are apt to suffer with sore eyes.

Ducks do not require nest boxes. They prefer to drop their eggs about the house or yard.

See that the duck house is well ventilated. To shut them up in a close coop at night makes them nervous, and they suffer considerably.

Nothing is as fatal to young ducks as the hot sun. Be sure to have a shady nook for them to go to.

Too many drakes in a flock is apt to be injurious; one to four ducks is about right.

Geo. A. Palmer, an English writer, says it does not pay to keep the stock ducks more than two years.

Never breed from your immature stock on both sides. The finest young will be produced by mating one-year-old ducks to a two-year-old drake.

While the duck may be classed as a "rough and ready" fowl, it will not stand neglect.

While ducks can be successfully kept on land, they do better when given bathing water. Bathing gives them exercise and keeps down surplus fat.

The healthy duck seems always to be hungry.

Pekin ducks do not very often become broody.

The most attractive market carcass is one that is fat, plump and round. It requires about two weeks to properly fatten a duck for market. To be most attractive, the skin of the market duck should be one color throughout.

It is the nature of a duck to fatten rapidly, often getting so fat that it will drop dead from sudden fright.

If the ducks are to be yarded, there should be double runs for each flock, so that while the one is being occupied, the other can be sown to some green crop. This will disinfect the soil, and give a good feast of greens.

The duck in good condition will lay from one hundred to one hundred and twenty eggs, as an average, in seven months' laying. The shells of duck eggs being thick are more slowly affected by heat or cold. They will hold heat better than hens' eggs, which makes it more difficult to cool during incubation.

The duck food should be of a bulky nature, like chopped green corn, cut grass and clover, chopped vegetables mixed with grain, and wheat bran and meat scraps.

In picking out ducks for breeding, choose those of good size of frame, length of body, and of an active nature.

During incubation, as a rule, duck eggs require more air than hen eggs; as air increases the air cell of the egg, it is the all-important part.

SATURDAY, APRIL 8, 1905.

The fourth of March last recorded two events of vital importance to the nation. First, the establishment of the American Fancier here in Washington, the other the President renewing his lease upon the White House. One month later at Pittsburg gathered the history makers of the poultry ruler. Neither The Fancier nor the President can do things that equal this body, that for novel procedure leads the world. For all this the true fancier and well equipped breeder continues to grow and to sell at profitable prices the prize winners without the new Standard to mate by.

Notwithstanding the late season, we have at hand letters from our advertisers who say they have at this time more orders for eggs for hatching than they will be able to fill in the next three weeks. Others mention the fact that they have long since sold all the stock they can spare at the present time. All of this points to the fact that there is plenty of business to be had, providing you have good quality to sell, and offer it through publications that bring the returns.

Good quality will always sell at prices that are profitable, while inferior stuff will not be in demand at any price.

The time that is wasted might better be used for improvement.

We published the letter from President Orr for the good of the order, little thinking that others would take it up for closer scrutiny. Official comments of this kind must set people to thinking, and more of them may come to light during the next few months. We are strongly in favor of outspoken, fearless expressions, but have no sympathy for the non-de-plume or anonymous communications that sling mud from behind a screen. Those who have not the courage to express their opinions over their own name, should not attempt to show their ill feelings from behind a shield. The most dangerous wounds are given by those who come in the dark, and strike in the back. There is entirely too much of this "I told you so" behind one's back, with pleasant smiles masking the true feelings in the open.

Better by far suffer an imaginary wrong than to shoot in the dark and injure the innocent.

The court of last resort may not deal out justice in the opinion of all, nevertheless its rulings should be accepted as law.

There is plenty to occupy our minds for several years along the line of improvement. Why not have such convincing uniformity of breed formation as to remove the possibility of the question being called up, as to whether a blue ribbon winner had the proper shape or not? How out of place to hear a well informed breeder say that the first prize Plymouth Rock female was a true Wyandotte in shape, or that the winning Wyandotte was a rose comb Plymouth Rock. The future of the standard bred poultry business depends for sucess upon established rules for breed characteristics. True type must be established and maintained throughout the entire list of breeds or the downfall of many of them must follow. The time is near at hand for discarding inferior birds. Quality will be the future demand.

More care should be given to the placing of awards; fair criticism of the work should follow.

The most competent judges should be employed, and these should be held strictly to account.

There are two unwritten laws that should be carefully modified. The first of these is the straining of the meaning of "Americanism" into a rule of courtesy that prevents one judge from saying another is wrong, even though the case considered may be so glaring as to be laughable; the other is the almost utter uselessness of a protest. The awards should always go to the most deserving specimens. Whenever an error has been made, if truly an error, and not simply a difference of opinion, it should be corrected, as a duty to exhibitor and visitor alike, both of whom have been wronged through the mistake. Many visitors to exhibitions have turned from the business, influenced by what they call unjust treatment of exhibits, and the outspoken complaints among the dissatisfied.

A satisfied exhibitor will swell the classes, a disgusted visitor will not come again.

That which is founded upon reliabilty will outgrow all expectations.

The new Standard may be a misfortune rather than a blessing; its influence may lead to disappointment. Some who stood absolutely for certain illustrating may be called upon to fill future orders to meet the demands of those illustrations. The clamor of the breeder for the new Standard to mate by, will scarcely equal the uproar of the amateur breeder who sends in an order for exhibition fowls, which he compares upon arrival with these same illustrations, and finds them wanting.

It is not all gold that glitters, and the boomerang cuts both ways.

The fifth of the series of the "Galery of Fame" was published last week in The Feather. It is of the Bradley Brothers, so well known to fame as producers of exhibition Plymouth Rocks. Those who desire to keep the unbroken chain should have both The Feather and The Fancier come regularly to their homes. These are home publications that are fearless and clean, and nothing that will injure the feelings of the most retiring will be found in them. It is our aim to tell the news of the poultry world, and to scatter broadcast ideas that will help our readers to gain all the benefits possible from the keeping of poultry and pigeons.

From California comes the word: "Congratulations and best wishes for the new Fancier. The Galley of Fame is grand."

Another writes: " 'Got him on the jump' is great." Dear readers, we have just opened our sample case. Come with us to the future feast.

The blasts of winter with ice and snow, has changed as if by magic, in the middle south. The last ten days of March might be mistaken for May. The blossoms, leaves and flowers have sprung into early life to greet the chicks that had so much attention given them in the April 1st issue of The Feather. Oh, what joy and bliss comes to the fancier who dwells among the early blossoms, as compared to his fellow farmer of northern New York who was compelled to brush the snow from his doorway during the closing days of the month.

Professor Wood, of the Smithsonian Institute, who has just come home from Florida, tells of the early January hatched chicks upon his Orange Grove Farm, and of fresh laid eggs that never sold above 20 cents per dozen in that locality during the entire winter. Buildlng hens' nests under blooming orange trees in February, is a thought for those of us who waded through four feet of snow and endured zero weather during the same period. There is a great future for the hen business throughout the South. Just consider that the winter resort hotels of the South continues to draw their supply of poultry and eggs from the New York and Boston markets. You who already live South should study the problem, and those who long for summer climate during the entire year, might well study the best methods of handling poultry in these localities.

Locate close to the market; supply the demand from short range, and ship the surplus rather than the whole product.

The bugs that are natural to the climate of the South can be obliterated, as are the insect vermin of the North.

Fowls do remarkably well in India and China. There is no reason why they can not be made profitable in our Southern States. Hunt out the obstacles in the way of successful growing of fowls in that locality and overcome them. Hatch the chicks in December, January, February and March to conform to the locality, and they will be out of danger of many things that hinder their growth after a later date. Conform to the heat conditions of the locality and fight the insects there as we must do North during the heated term. Study closely the necessities of the locality, and learn to meet them prior to embarking too largely in poultry growing in climates unfamiliar.

Once more we have the pleasure of introducing to our readers Friend Oliphant, of Trenton, New Jersey, who has taken under his patronage the Eastern department of "The Natural Hen Heat Incubators and Brooders," the advertisement for which will be found in this issue of The Fancier. Mr. Oliphant came to this office to tell us in person of the excellent quality of these machines. Send to him for full information.

The nearer we live within the demands of nature's law the longer are we likely to endure.

Avoid controversy with the friends or foes of American Reds; by so doing you will receive less mail, and not be called into extra session.

New for the "I told you so" calamity howler, some of whom have predicted the dissolution of the parent organization for about twenty years. What would the poultry press and the non-members do for out of season ammunition if they did not have this non-destructible battlement to shoot at? Like the good ship of state, she will continue to sail over her calaminators without an injury so large but what it will close before its members meet again.

"Uncle Isaac" Felch makes a lengthy reply in the American Stock-Keeper to his critics regarding the stand he took in the Rhode Island Red matter, as well as in relation to the duplication of breeds. There is much good sense in this article, albeit lost in a maze of words of faulty diction and rambling thought at times.

Mr. Felch in a most positive way right in the beginning of his communication remarks: "I assert again that the acceptance of fowls as breeds that differ only in a single section is a curse. Not one word against their merit." This is a very square and bold statement worthy of more than passing notice.

It applies to existing conditions relative to the admission of new varieties to the American Standard of Perfection, and forcibly recalls the discussion held at the A. P. A. meeting in 1898, at Boston, Mass., regarding the proper qualification a new breed or variety should possess to gain admission to the Standard. The rule now in force was adopted as a result of that discussion. Has it been obeyed or honored? The answer is in the negative if a strict interpretation of the rule is taken. The Partridge-Golden-Penciled Wyandotte muddle at the Chicago meeting, and the more recent American-Rhode Island-Red fiasco at Minneapolis indicate a very strange lack of appreciation of the laws that should govern the decision of the members of the American Poultry Association when called upon to decide questions of this kind.

New varieties have slipped into the Standard reservation with little or no difficulty. The friends and advocates of these newcomers usually are on hand to make the sliding process comparatively simple and easy. Once in, the variety has a harder time to get out. It is on par with admitting new members to clubs or associations, fraternal or otherwise,. It is easy enough where lax rules and careless judgment prevail, to get an undesirable member in, but it is almost impossible to get him out after he is in. Varieties have been admitted to standard as Wyandottes and Plymouth Rocks that have not one drop of Wyandotte or Plymouth Rock blood in their veins. They came in under false pretenses, and yet who will have the temerity to ask their expulsion from the Wyandotte and Rock families in the Standard?

Mr. Felch calls attention to this in the article we referred to above, but we believe he is in error when he speaks of the White Wyandottes as being different in thirty-five points out of one hundred from its predecessors, and never should have been called a Wyandotte. He further states that fault was found by breeders of its being called Wyandotte, which led up to the resolve at Charleston that this duplicating breeds' names was not expedient. The White Wyandotte as we knew it in the eighties was a true sport of the Silver Wyandotte, the real simon pure Wyandotte fowl of America. It certainly has a right to be classed with its progenitor as a Wyandotte.

The open door policy of admitting new varieties regardless of distinct breed characteristics will find many difficulties ahead in its future path, and the American Poultry Association will have to consider some problems that will not be easy of solution, if the Minneapolis ruling is to become a precedent. Silver Penciled and Partridge Plymouth Rocks are coming next, and will demand a seat in the band wagon of the Standard feathered tribe. Yet neither has a drop of Plymouth Rock blood in its veins. If the duplication of breeds and multiplication of varieties keep up a new Standard of Perfection will have to be published every few years, and the classification at poultry shows will exceed the wildest dreams of the old time Quaker City pigeon fanciers, who never felt real happy unless they had over four hundred classes. It is indeed time to call a halt and stop to inquire: "Where are we at "

The special meeting of the American Poultry Association at Pittsburg, Pa., April 4, should bring about a better understanding on these vital Standard matters than heretofore. It is an extraordinary session called for an extraordinary purpose. The call, the selection of the place, and motives back of both, have been questioned and criticised. This was to be expected. We do know that the motives of some loyal members of the American Poultry Association were influenced solely by the desire to save the old society the humiliation of being a party to a hastily and ill-considered deal in loading up its Standard with varieties of fowl that have for its sponsors only commercially interested parties, regardless of the fitness of things.

We do not look for a large attendance at the meeting of the American Poultry Association to be held at Pittsburg. It is asking much of members scattered all over the United States of America and in Canada, to attend such functions at their own expense, when only the fate of a new breed is hanging in the balance. No doubt those most interested will be in evidence and fight their battles to a finish. We believe that the thorough discussion on this whole business will help to adjust matters at the special meeting. It is a case of "give and take," with just a fair regard for the law that governs it.

When the meeting at Pittsburg adjourns, and instruction given to the committee of five to proceed at once with the publication of the Standard, the great army of poultry raisers in this country will be satisfied and relieved. We know that the work on the Standard is progressing rapidly, and but for the unfortunate barriers put up at the Minneapolis meeting the book would have been in press today; in fact a number of forms are ready to be printed at a moment's notice. It may suit the purpose and convenience of some to lay the blame at the door of a few of the committee, but the real cause of the delay will be made clear to the public in a very short time.

The great show of the South is held at Atlanta, Ga., under the auspices of the Georgia State Fair and Atlanta Exposition management. It is an annual fixture and brings out the highest grade of feathered stock. The prizes are the most liberal offered, being, on single birds, first, $3, second $2; breeding pens, first $4, second $2. The classification is also liberal, including about fifty standard varieties of chickens, besides turkeys, ducks, geese and pigeons. The next show will be held October 17 to 21. This is the week following Hagerstown and should prove advantageous to exhibitors at the latter, as they can easily send birds from there to Atlanta in time for the judging.

The Adirondack Poultry Club, whose shows in the past have made Johnstown, N. Y., famous, will hold its annual meeting April 19, to elect officers and make arrangements for another great Johnstown show next season.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., has also fallen into line and will hold a big show December 5 to 9. Most of the leading poultry fanciers in that city and vicinity are members of the new society under whose auspices the exhibition will be held.

The Albany, N. Y., show held last month, was, contrary to expectations, a big success. Many thought it was too late in the season to hold such an exhibition, but the entries were larger than expected, and the gate reciepts unusually gratifying.

Mr. F. A. Keller, proprietor of the Mountain Crest Poultry Farm, Pigeon, Pa., has purchased the entire flock of Silver Penciled Wyandottes of Mr. Haslet, Tionesta, Pa., including all the New York and Pittsburg winners. This will give Mr. Keller three breeding pens of very choice birds, and we may look for some fine exhibits and hot times in the Silver Penciled Wyandotte alley next season. The success Mr. Keller has attained in breeding Partridge Wyandottes is attested by his record at Madison Square Garden, N. Y., his cock bird winning first over the challenge cup winners at the Brockton, Partridge Wyandotte Club show.

The Rhode Island Poultry Association will hold its next annual show at Providence, R. I., December 5 to 9. Mr. W. I. Brown, Providence, R. I., is the new secretary.

Lest we forget. The Standard of Perfection will be published in due and ancient form in the good old summer time. But it will be a very valuable and interesting book all the same.

Gallery of Fame.

I. K. FELCH.

Known as the "Sage of Natick" and the "father of the score-card." Isaac K. Felch for over fifty years has been before the American poultry public and has contributed a giant's share to the up-building of the fancy of America. Although past seventy years old, he is still hale and hearty, and as enthusiastic as ever. In 1868 he devised the score-card used by the American Poultry Association; in 1888 he originated the decimal score card which he has used ever since. For the past forty years he has officiated at leading poultry shows in the United States. Although a vigorous writer and aggressive on all matters relating to poultry culture, Mr. Felch in all his years as a writer on poultry topics has never stooped to personalities, and always worked in a square fashion for what he deemed was right. He still breeds his boyhood favorites, the Light Brahmas, at his home, Natick, Mass.

THE FANCY

The Albany Show Winds Up the Season.

The last show of the season was held at Albany, New York, March 16, 17 and 18. Although rather late in getting started—only six weeks being available—the management did nobly. It was an exceedingly fine exhibition of poultry and pigeons. Being the first show held in the capital city of the Empire State in nearly fifteen years, it attracted many of the old time fanciers as well as the new generation. That old veteran fancier, Philander Williams, sent a large and fine string of birds, while the neighboring cities of Schenectady, Amsterdam and Johnstown helped the local entries out to a large extent. The fact was, the hall was too small to hold the exhibits comfortably, double tiering being necessary, but the Empire Cooping Company "filled the bill" in fine style.

The light was insufficient, which caused many a good bird to be hidden in dark recesses of a lower tier of coops. The judging was done by Mr. C. E. Rockenstyne and John D. Jacquins, and gave general satisfaction. We were glad to see "the tall sycamore of the Hudson," Major Rockenstyne, back in harness and place the ribbons. He is one of few all round judges in the United States, and one of the very best. It is a pity that his duties in the important public office he holds prevents his judging at as many shows as in the past. Mr. Jacquins, although a newcomer in the judges ranks is an old experienced breeder and will make good in the show room. The officers are a very intelligent and able body of men, that will make any show a success.

The birds on exhibition were strictly high grade, the American classes being especially favored with fine specimens, White Wyandottes leading in numbers, some excellent specimens being shown by Chase, Davenport and others. Barred Rocks were very good, such breeders as Hayner, Jones and Hallenbeck putting up choice specimens. Buff Rocks were a grand lot, as might be expected when Edgewood Farm shows. Mr. Witbeck, proprietor of the latter, certainly knows a Buff Rock from beak to toe. Buff Wyandottes also made up a fine class. Silver Penciled and Columbian Wyandottes were considerably above the average. Both Light and Dark Brahmas were represented by birds of good quality, as were the Cochins, but in numbers they failed to make a hit. White Leghorns were well represented in numbers, with plenty of quality. Brown and Buff Leghorns were rather scarce. Minorcas made up a very good class, and Andalusians close up.

A number of very good Houdans were on exhibition, and some nice Buff Orpingtons. A few extra choice Lakenvelders proved a benefit to this variety and attracted much attention. Bantams were numerous and as a rule very good in quality, notably Sebright and Cochins. The pigeon display was a feature, and one of the best we have seen at a show of this size in the past season.

Pit Game Classes at Our Shows.

I noticed in Brown's Budget, March 25 number of The American Fancier, this query: "What is the use of having Pit Game classes at the shows?" also "that no judge can determine which are the best," etc., etc.

For the benefit of Brother Brown and all others interested, I desire to answer the query and refute that statement as stated. From my twelfth year up to my thirtieth year I raised Game Cocks and enjoyed the unlawful sport of cock fighting, and was trained in the gentle art by two old cockers that knew a thing or two about the birds and this pastime.

In nearly every show we see the Pit Game alley. The boys think as much of their birds as any other set of fanciers, and really, I think more, combining as does the pit cock with the most beautiful plumage a courage unqualified by any other live creation. Their admirers want them judged on their merits and not by guess work, and in refuting the statement mentioned, I say it can be done without a particle of guess work and to the complete satisfaction of even the defeated exhibitor.

One of the first things I learned of my old cocker friends was to pick out the bird that could strike the hardest and most telling blows, or endure a long hard fight (when properly trained) without weakening. These are points in a Game Cock that count, or cause the other fellow to count, and when I have had occasion to judge Pit Game classes, I used that knowledge in placing the awards.

The Pit Game fowl, broadest at shoulders and across hips, with the shortest back and the most muscular thighs and legs, is the bird that will take the coin in a fight, everything else being equal. In judging them in the show-room look for these points in placing awards, and it's no longer guess work. It can be easily and quickly done by measuring with the hand about as one does when feeling for crooked backs, etc. In arranging Pit Game classes in premium lists of shows color should have no part of it, all colors competing together in their separate classes as cock, hens, cockerel (or stag), and pullet and pen.

I trust I have made myself clear, and would say in closing that in our shows we want all classes but no guess work.

The Care of Poultry.

One James Shackelton has advanced many theories for the care of poultry. One of these is that Leghorns are not apt to make good table poultry. Another replies to this that some time ago he visited a fattening plant where eight hundred birds were undergoing treatment. More than one hundred of these were White Leghorns. Said the man in charge: "These little broilers are fattening up fine. In three weeks no one will be able to tell them from Orpingtons." Fully one-third of the birds in the crates were Leghorns, and when the fact is considered that every bird in the crates were weighed once a week, one could not imagine that the manager would continue in the attempt to make table poultry of these Leghorns if they were unprofitable. The facts are, Leghorns are not the most desirable poultry generally grown for table purposes, yet even the old hens of this kind, if properly fattened, make good, small-sized, dressed poultry. It is possible to make the Leghorns just as plump and just as toothsome as any poultry if they are fed for the purpose. As generally and naturally grown they are not so desirable. We witnessed, a short time since, the sale of a lot of Leghorns that had been culled from a flock that sold, live weight, at over thirteen cents per pound. More than this was not paid for the best of the Plymouth Rocks and Wyandottes. Quality makes the value of all market poultry. To have the best quality you must bestow the best care, nothing else will bring success.

Mr. Morgan Porter, of Pittsburg, Pa., has a line of rose comb White Leghorns hard to beat. Mr. Hewes decorated them with score cards running from ninety-four to ninety-five and a quarter points. His advertisement was booked for our columns directly after the Pittsburg Show, but copy was lost in the mail.

NOTES FROM ENGLAND

BY JOHN WHARTON.

It was my fortune to spend August of the past year in the States, bent on gaining an insight into your methods of poultry keeping in general and to see if I could learn anything. To say that I was pleased with my trip is to put it mildly—very mildly, indeed. Nay, I was delighted beyond words with what I saw and the many kindnesses rendered to me by the many prominent fanciers I met. Everyone without exception helped to make my visit a pleasant one.

The most important thing that struck me was the difference between poultry keeping with you and the methods adopted here. Of course, the climate is responsible for this vast difference. I have just received a letter from a fancier I met at Boston, and he tells me he has never seen the ground for nine weeks, while here we have never seen it snow covered for more than three days this winter, and skating has only been of some five days' duration. This difference of weather, of course, makes the methods to be adopted in every sense different.

For the sake of those who have never lived in England, I will describe our methods, and to those who own England as the land of their birth, well it may awaken pleasant memories—the song of skylark or the thrush as you in your boyhood day went into the wood to find your birds—the chaffinch calling to his mate from the top of a larch tree and the pleasant note of the cuckoo in the distance.

To begin, I must say that you can, on less capital, start here than with you—the climate being so mild we do not require the substantial houses that I saw on every well-equipped farm in the States—houses in which you wintered your birds and which meant large outlay.

The houses we use are made up of tongued and grooved boards one inch thick. These are made to hold from ten to thirty birds, and are placed in each pen. Half of the houses on my own farm are sleeping end and the other half on the scratching-shed principle. In these houses we can safely winter our birds and I only remember once having a frost bitten comb, and strangely enough he was a Buff Wyandotte, a New York winner that I had imported. If you go among the farmers you will see these houses on all parts of the farm, especially in that part of England which is entirely grazing. In the fox hunting parts, of course, all these houses have to be closed at nights, or Master Reynard would in all probability pay an unwelcome visit sooner or later.

The vast difference comes in our time of hatching; I understand you begin about April 1, while we begin about January 1. Of course, it takes a clever breeder to be successful so early in the year, but I have no doubt as I write these lines, March 14, there are thousands of healthy chickens in the hands of fanciers, many of which are nicely feathered and showing promise of their quality. The reason of this early hatching is easily understood when you realize that our chicken shows open with the Royal, June 27, and practically close about December 1, when all of our last shows are over. The hatching season extends until the middle of May when all practical fanciers stop; which shows, as we know, that late-hatched chickens never make size or do as well as the early ones. This also brings in turn early egg seasons. By the 10th of December we are called upon to fill orders, and this goes on until about April 10.

BLACK MINORCA COCKEREL.

Another difference and one that is in your favor, is that 95 per cent of the British poultry keepers have to purchase all their corn. I notice that you are able to grow a large quantity and in that way keep down your food bill. What I saw of your crops of corn, apples, grapes, melons and peaches has so disgusted me with our climate in that direction that I am almost resolved never to try to grow anything again except chickens. When it comes to purchasing corn, wheat, etc., we can buy it just about the same rates as with you, although it may have grown in your fertile country.

It was my good fortune to see one show or fair when I was with you (I refer to the Cambridge Fair, N. Y.), and I must say I was greatly struck with the difference between it and our shows. In England, a man who shows a score of birds is looked up to as a teamster and not a fancier, but I found at that fair 300 in one hand. Then again, the duration of the fair and the fact that the judging only commenced on the second day, and from what I saw would not be completed until the third.

With the exception of some six of the largest shows we have none in England for more than two days, which includes penning, judging and packing, while many of our summer shows held in conjunction with the agricultural shows begin at 9 a. m. and end in some cases as early as 4 p. m., and seldom later than 6 p. m. In this case a few chickens can be trotted around to many shows and thus win lots of money, as all these shows give from $2 to $5 as first prize.

One thing that struck me was the way you disqualify, say for one feather on the leg. In England we should call it a fault and deduct points according, but would not throw him out entirely. I was pleased with your ribbons and consider them an improvement on our cards which we use to denote the prize winners. I shall try my best to introduce them in England as I am sure they would be appreciated.

As I watched the chickens in your yards during my visit, I considered they had a happy time as insects seemed more numerous than with us—mosquitos certainly were—and as for that reason they should be reared cheaper than with us.

Without a doubt the three favorite breeds in England just now are the Wyandotte, the Partridge taking the lead, and the Orpington, with Rocks a good third. You should be proud that two out of the three are of your origin. At the best shows during the past year Wyandottes have turned up in strong force. During the past eighteen months a club for White and another for Partridge have been formed and are going strong. The Partridge club has 120 members and is doing much to make this breed popular. In fact their popularity is nothing short of a boom, prices ranging from $75 to $800 have been paid this year for the best chickens, and at the present time breeders are returning orders for eggs by the dozen, as all they can spare are booked at $5 the setting.

It may be interesting here to give a brief history as to how they landed in England. In the spring of 1900 I wrote the late Joseph McKeen asking him if he would sell me some stock. He replied that he hoped to have some to offer me the coming fall. Alas, death took him from your midst when the fall arrived. I was, however, able, through Mr. E. O. Theim, to import some of Mr. McKeen's stock. They arrived at my farm December, 1900. I had also further importations from Mr. Theim and also from Mr. George H. Brackenbury, and from them practically all the Partridges in England have sprung. It was part of my business in visiting the States to try and bring back some new blood. I found this the most difficult task I ever had in my life, as our Partridges and yours might be two different breeds, so vastly different are they. It appears, though, all sprang from the same parent stock, but by the Standard demanding different colors, etc., you have discarded what we have kept, vice versa. In England we want a lemon hackle whilst you demand it should be red, and in place of your mahogany ground color we want a golden brown. Of course you have followed after your Cochins and we after ours. It is nevertheless a great pity that it has stopped all business between us and it is a great loss. I was glad to find the Silver Penciled Wyandottes being bred same as our own. I predict a great future for this breed as a club is just being formed to look after its interests, and already some 40 breeders have joined.

When these separate clubs for Whites and Partridges formed, many prophesied that it would ruin the United Wyandotte Club and do no good to the breeds it was interested in. Time has proved this to be false prophecy, and I am more than ever convinced that a breed that is worth its name is worthy a separate club to see that it has its share in the prize list.

The Silver and Golden Wyandottes are just about holding their own, but Buffs are almost lost to sight. It is very curious, as the same color in Orpingtons are very popular, and without a doubt the next in rank to the Partridge Wyandotte. Black Orpingtons are in many more hands than they were a few years ago when Mr. Partington's name headed the list at nearly every show. No greater calamity can befall a breed than all the good ones to get into one breeder's hands. Fanciers soon neglect to enter for competition and down goes the variety.

THE PROSPECTS FOR SHOW SEASON, 1905.

With the present mild winter we doubtless will see early chicken shows well patronized. I am down to judge at the Royal, and will let your readers know after that event what turns up.

The one thought that is ocupying fancier's minds is the Crystal Palace and International Shows, and whether they will clash as last year. Between these two shows there is anything but friendly rivalry, and the result was last year to find these large shows both on one date in London, but yet some 16 miles apart. It was confusing. Personally, I judged at one and exhibited at the other. It was very provoking that you could meet no one you wished to see. If you inquired for anyone they were sure to be at the other how, and so confusion and disappointment reigned. They were in other ways two grand shows, and worthy of separate dates. I trust wise council will prevail and satisfaction will be shown all around.

May the season of 1905 mark an advance in every breeder's yard, and may that international intercourse between fanciers become more and more real, is my sincere wish.

Faverolles, the new famous "bearded feathered ladies and gentlemen of France," are enjoying considerable popularity. Thanks to their intrinsic merit as utilitarian fowls and the good work of Dr. Phelps, Mr. Symonds and others have done to call attention to their superior qualities.

Some Facts.

"Women as poultry growers should be encouraged," states Mrs. Blattler. Of course they should; some of the most successful poultry growers in the country are women. If women had half a chance, and were given all the poultry money they make, instead of being called upon by the Lord's of the Household to surrender it to them, the poultry growing industry would advance throughout the country. Women are naturally successful with poultry. Women should teach their daughters to care for poultry. Women might become the great poultry producers of the world if they were partially encouraged by the men. If the men would assist the women one-half as much in the care of poultry as the women assist the men in the other duties on the farm, the poultry problem would be solved, and we would have more fresh-laid eggs during the winter months.

We are interested to note that Henry L. Haff is an enthusiastic advocate of pure bred Buff Leghorns. He has with great care compiled a lot of statistics proving entirely to his own satisfaction the superiority of pure bred fowls and the economy in buying good stock to start with. Thefollowing speaks for itself:

"One pure-bred Buff Leghorn hen, costing, say $2, properly mated, will in season lay 13 eggs in as many days; these eggs are worth at least $2 per setting for hatching; results: One pure-bred Buff Leghorn hen pays for herself in 13 days!

"One mongrel hen, costing, say 75 cents, lays 75 eggs in 150 days (that's being liberal to the mongrel), they can't be sold for hatching, so they go to the market, at one cent apiece; the result is: One mongrel hen pays for herself in 150 days."

BROWN'S BUDGET

At the farmers' institutes last winter talks on poultry were regularly called for in many sections of the country. Miss Anna E. Brennen, of Baltimore, gave several practical talks in the Maryland farmers' institutes.

A newspaper paragraph tells of a Virginian's marvelous success in raising wild turkeys. It is claimed he "procures" the "wild eggs" and then hatches them under tame hens. He must be very "cute" to find wild turkey eggs. It's a good daily paper story though.

This reminds me of a lady who drove from Baltimore to my yards. She came in a fancy dog cart, a bay bob-tail horse, and a servant, "colored," with a plug hat on. The following conversation took place: Lady—"Ah, have you the pure breed of eggs of the Plymouth Rock?" "Yes, ma'am." Lady—"Ah, am glad. Now have you a pure bred Plymouth Rock setting to sell with the eggs?" "No, ma'am, we have no setting hens." Lady—"Ah, too bad. I've got plenty of common hens that want to set, but of course that would make the eggs hatch common chickens." And the lady wouldn't be convinced her theory was not correct—and no sale took place.

"Are geese profitable to raise?" This was asked a daily paper which answered: "Yes, if they are pastured on your neighbor's grass." Was it wisdom that prompted the reply, or does that editor live in a geese suburb?

Farmer Billups says his "hens don't pay." The hens roosted on the mowing machine under an old lean-too, leaky shed last winter and they probably don't think they owe the farmer anything to pay for.

When a man makes failures in other occupations and then concludes he is a fit subject to start the poultry business, it is easy to guess what his "finish" will be.

"Will the poultry business be overdone?" No. Poultry products are constantly increasing, but there is a greater increase in the demand for fine products. Every spring there are thousands who get the "hen fever," imagining all there is to do is to "chuck" out the feed, and gather the eggs. It is a mistake to suppose any occupation can be mastered at once by a novice. Business rules govern poultry raising, and their observance is necessary to succeed same as in other callings.

Women make the best poultry experts. They observe strictly the many minor details that are so valuable. Their ideas of neatness and sympathetic natures insure the best of care for their flocks. Gentle dealing with poultry is more of a factor than is generally thought probable.

I've been trying to set some pullets, and have about made up my mind I've got to stop or give up my religion. I've had several cases that made me raise up and call the inventors of incubators blessed. I'm not telling what my language was to the obstreperous pullets.

Don't keep more stock than your capital will allow you to do properly. Good results can only follow liberal management.

In Bennett's old poultry book (about 1850), I find an interesting account of a poultry show held in Boston, "15th and 16th days of November, 1849." "The number of specimens of the different feathered races" numbered 1,423, and there were 219 exhibitors. Under the head of "Fowls Produced by Crosses of Various Breeds and Varieties, the committee would mention, as worthy of notice, Plymouth Rock fowls, so called, bred by Dr. J. C. Bennett, of Plymouth," etc.

The following from the same book is also interesting: "I have frequently taken a laying hen of one breed and put her with a male of another breed, and set the egg laid on the second day thereafter, and the chicken had all the characteristic marks of both breeds of the parentage. This was the case when I first hit upon the famous Plymouth Rock breed, which now promises, all things considered, to be one of the best breeds in the country. The first of this breed was thus accidentally produced, and the experiment was followed up to a desirable result." Great prophecy this.

Look out for the safe (?) house cat when the chirpers commence to take their early spring sun baths on the south side of their coops. The only safe cat around young chickens—with possibly an occasional exception—is a dead cat—nine times dead, too.

Don't trust a valuable setting of eggs with one hen. Place the eggs under two hens, and put enough other eggs to make the desired number for each hen complete. Mark the other eggs with ink, and when the hens are about due give all of the valuable eggs to the surest setter. This plan will not mix the chicks.

While saving eggs for the setters or the incubator, place them on the large or butt end. A good plan is to set them on end in dry oats or wheat bran, as close as possible without contact.

Beginners make a serious mistake in starting with several birds. Learn to properly care for and to thoroughly know one breed before taking others in hand. One lesson at a time in chickenology is enough.

When successful with a certain sized flock and you feel like doubling its size, carefully consider all conditions. Can you give the increased flock equally favorable accommodations? Increasing a flock without also increasing their house and run capacity will bring trouble in many ways.

If you set eggs from the pullets always select the largest eggs. There is considerable variance in size of pullets' egge, and selections on this line result in good-sized chicks, and a tendency to improve the size of the eggs of the general flock.

Today's care of the poultry is for tomorrow's good also.

POINTERS ON GEESE.

As a rule, the goose is a poor setter.

We have found the goose to be about the cleanest of fowls, being very particular as to what it eats as well as the condition of the food.

The market price for goose eggs, after Easter, is about double the price of hen eggs. The weight of goose eggs runs about 5½ ounces each. The demand lasts until about the last of May.

To fatten geese requires about five weeks' careful training.

Although geese are long-lived, breeders do not consider it profitable to keep them after they are eight years old. A goose is not matured until it is three years old.

Kentucky has the honor of being the greatest goose-raising State.

Geese very quickly learn their attendant, and really show an appreciation for him. On the farm of the writer are three Toulouse geese. When first brought to the place they were very distant and excitable. Now, the moment the writer is in sight, they give a yell of welcome, and will follow him all over the place. They have even become so tame that the writer can stroke and pet them.

About three months of age, goslings will dress at ten to twelve pounds in weight.

It is always wisest to introduce new blood in the flock at least every five years.

It is stated that the contents of two goose eggs will equal in bulk that of seven hen eggs, with quite as large a proportion of yolk. They are in demand by bakers and confectioners.

The abdominal pouch indicates the age, growing larger each year.

For ages back goose grease has been a household remedy. It has even been asserted that it can be eaten on bread with salt, and, if freshly prepared, is very palatable and nutritious.

If the gander is treated kindly it will not be vicious, but it will not stand being tormented, and children especially should be taught that fact. They have great strength and can "fight to a finish" when they begin.

The domestic goose generally pairs, and very seldom mates with more than three females.

Geese are great "watch-dogs." The geese on the writer's farm ever give the alarm when strangers approach.

The method of picking geese alive is not practiced now as in former years.

As both sexes of geese are feathered exactly alike, it is very difficult to distinguish them. This is especially so while they are young. Experience breeders often determine the sex by the difference in voice, but that art is learned only after considerable knowledge of them. When the young geese are nearing maturity, it will be noticed that the gander is a heavier bird, and has longer neck and larger head than the goose.

TURKEY CULTURE.

Much of the fatality of young turkeys can be traced to indigestion. They are very apt to be overfed. Feed at regular hours, and an hour after feeding remove all that is left over. Grit must be constantly before them.

Relationship must be avoided in breeding turkeys. The penalty is strong for neglect in this matter. Those who have had extensive experience in raising turkeys assert that crooked breasts and other deformities are due to continued breeding from the same cock and hens.

Lice can destroy more young turkeys than any other disease, and the battle against this insect cannot be made too strong.

Why not make the turkey the national emblem instead of the eagle? Surely there is more real practical worth in the former than in the latter, and practical worth has a great standing with the American people.

NOTES IN PASSING.

"Muscle to win must be lubricated with brains," is applicable to the poultry business.

How many of our patriotic poultry people know that the famous Daniel Webster was an exhibitor at the first poultry show ever held in this country.

We think it was our worthy editor (J. H. Drevenstedt) who said: "A scrub may be useful, so is a rag carpet. Both are made up of unfathomable mixtures. They serve a purpose, but fail to cultivate a desire for the beautiful." There is more truth than poetry in that, but we think it would have been wiser to have said "a desire for the useful" rather than "beautiful." "Handsome is as handsome does."

When a man undertakes the poultry business "because it is easy," we pity him. It is not easy. While there is not the hard muscular work about it that we find in general farming, at the same time this constant "sameness" is what tires folks the most. No lazy man can find quarters in the poultry ranks.

For some reason or other the idea has gone out that, as a rule, the white breeds are less hardy than the dark or the parti-colored one. Some go as far as to say that there is only one exception, and that is the White Leghorns. The truth of the whole matter is, all breeds are hardy if given the proper care, and no breed will suffer neglect. The writer has bred black and white, and red and parti-colored varieties, and found them all alike in regards to health when they were given the right feed, the right housing and the right care generally.

Our associate, Judge George O. Brown, once said: "There are too many poultrymen who let their enthusiasm go down as the mercury in the thermometer goes up." We have met that class. Let the weather be biting cold, or sweltering hot, and the last thing they think of is, "are the fowls comfortable?" A man who will sit by the fire in winter, or under the shade tree in summer, and not pay heed to the wants of his poultry, has no right to stay in the business.

What the poultry world wants is not raw recruits, but men and women who have a love for the work, and who will not neglect their duties. We hear the cry "we had no luck," when, if they would have spelled that work "luck" with a "p" they would have found that the truth was "we had no pluck."

FACTS ABOUT EGGS.

Eggs are injured by washing; it gives them a frailer shell, and they will not keep so well for hatching.

Eggs belong to the nitrogenous group of foods, and would naturally and quite properly be combined in the diet with material supplying hydrates (sugar and starch) such as cereals, potatoes, etc.

The stale egg is not as heavy as the fresh one, and the shell becomes shiny and smooth, probably from the little oil that exudes by evaporation from the contents of the shell. The first eggs of the brown-egg layers are generally of a good color,

Strictly fresh eggs will sink to the bottom of a bucketful of water. At one day old they will sink nearly to the bottom, at two days half way up, three days float not quite at the top, four days just touch top, five or six days rise a little above top, and running a little higher as they daily grow in age.

The fresher the egg the better the hatch. The older the egg the weaker the germ. White-shelled eggs hatch easier than brown-shelled ones.

Ordinarily the egg has enough moisture in it to hatch it.

The fresher the egg the smaller the air cell at first testing.

If the air cell is very large, add moisture; if small, take moisture away.

SATURDAY, APRIL 15, 1905.

The work accomplished in one day at Pittsburg, by the members of the American Poultry Association, assembled there last week, is a striking illustration of what can be done at a meeting when only the business before it is the attraction.

The meetings held in connection with poultry shows are always irregularly attended. The show room, placing of awards, discussion regarding the merit of the exhibit, and other important matters relative to the show, consumes so much time that but little is left for the meeting of the association. Neither is the interest and enthusiasm as great as it should be, except on rare occasions.

At the Smoky City last week forty-four members of the association were present, most of whom came long distances at considerable expense. When men will sacrifice time, business and money to attend a meeting, it proves that an active interest is taken in it. Such are usually among the most valuable members of an association and can be depended upon to work for the best interests of the whole fraternity at large. This was strongly in evidence at Pittsburg, and the results speak volumes for the credit of conservative action on important matters.

The migratory habit of the American Poultry Association, touched upon in a recent issue of The American Fancier, is responsible for much of the unsatisfactory work done in the past by members in attendance at some far away meeting place. At one meeting not enough members were present to make a baker's dozen; at another meeting some twenty men legislated contrary to the unanimous wish of five hundred breeders, some two hundred of whom had expressed their views openly.

How can twenty men, few among whom know anything about the breed to be discussed or admitted to the Standard, delegate themselves to rise superior to the wishes of a large body that are of one mind and thought as to what they want? It is just such breaks, to use a popular expression, that destroys confidence in the American Poultry Association.

If the consideration of the American Red matter had come before a meeting familiar with all the facts, no such mistake would have resulted as at Minneapolis. There was no trouble at the Rochester meeting on this score, because it was known to be a meeting where the Standard was to be revised, and everybody was prepared for the occasion. What the American Poultry Association should do is plain. It should hold its annual meeting some time in the summer at a central point or place most accessible to the greatest number, with a delegate or proxy representation from distant points. Furthermore, the American Poultry Association can designate the shows in the East, West, North and South to be held under its rules and offer medals or diplomas, or it can extend this to State shows held under its rules. In doing this a guarantee must go with shows held under its rules that all premiums must be paid under penalty of being barred from holding shows in the future under its rules.

The Association should protect exhibitors the same as the American Kennel Club protects the exhibitors of dogs. In order to accomplish all this the society must be incorporated and organized on a strictly business basis.

The future of the American Poultry Association depends largely on the work to be done at the next anunal meeting. In amending the constitution and by-laws great care should be taken to make the laws governing this body as plain and practicable as possible. Stringent rules should be made to punish dishonest exhibitors, dealers and advertisers. Legal advice should be taken on these matters, so as to have full information as to the extent the association could go in the governing of these matters.

The advisory board should be dropped as a useless incumbrance, and an active board of directors placed in power. The office of secretary-treasurer should be abolished, and separate offices of secretary and treasurer created. The ancient habit of electing a president from a State where the meeting is held should be consigned to oblivion. The rule that a president should hold only one term is a mooted question and debatable. We believe a good presiding officer is a good proposition to tie to. What is needed is the right man in the right place. The selection of men to fill the offices of president, secretary, and treasurer at the next annual meeting will be a matter of very grave importance, and it is to be hoped that only the merits and the qualifications of the candidates will give them the place and not the pull or sentimental support some chronic office seeker or good fellow might have.

Let the members of the American Poultry Association get together in good faith and proceed to cut open a great big melon, plant its seeds on fertile ground, and raise a crop of good results that will place the American poultry industry at the head of all others in America.

These matters most important to the future welfare of the association should have timely and careful consideration. We have gone beyond the condition that will longer permit of former methods, the childhood days of the association have faded away, or at least they should be laid aside for more mature consideration. The thought of self and individual "axe grinding" must be stopped if the best work is to be done, a better receptacle for records than the vest pocket of the secretary must be found, and the affairs of the association must be managed as are the affairs of an incorporated body that is doing business for best results.

Negligent business methods have almost weighed down the association with debt. We continually build the burdens higher and do not seem to consider that pay day must come, nor consider those for whom we have been working for these many years. No regularly organized business could be induced to accept our methods and follow them. No one would attempt to run a peanut stand as the American Poultry Association has been. The day and the hour is at hand for advancement into national favor, or a decline into insignificance. Choose well and be great, continue to make mistakes and be forgotten.

Every time you feel disturbed about the A. P. A. or the new Standard renew your subscription to The Fancier or The Feather or get some new ones for us. Be good and you will be happy.

It is with great regret that we learn of the death of Miss Croad, at her home, Worthing, England, on March 8. The writer of these notes for many years past has been in correspondence with the late Miss Croad, and many of her articles have appeared in The American Fancier since its inception in 1893. The kindly notices in our English exchanges regarding Miss Croad's grand work for the Langshan, and her broad and fine characteristics as a woman and true fancier, are touching to those who knew her intense devotion to principle and her love for a thoroughbred fowl.

Our contemporary, "Poultry," states: "To the late Miss Croad, the Langshan fowlowed not only its prosperity, but its very existence, and during many vicissitudes through which that excellent breed has passed it had not a more staunch supporter than the deceased lady. Miss Croad's connection with the fancy commenced on February 14, 1872, when the first Langshan arrived at Major Croad's residence. But it was not until the death of Major Croad that she came prominently before the poultry world. The Langshan as a pure breed had been assailed, and Miss Croad commenced a gallant defense of the breed, advancing such proof of its purity that defied contention and clearly showing that the Black Langshan, as had been asserted, was in no way allied to the Black Cochin."

We well remember the Black Langshan cockerel exhibited by Dr. S. T. Lea of Hodges, S. C., at the Atlanta show in early nineties, a bird that came from the yards of Miss Croad. He stood next to a Black Langshan cockerel that was American bred and considered the finest specimen ever sent to a show. There was but a points difference in the two birds, both being marvels in color and type, and both being of the real Croad strain, albeit one was bred in this country.

It was a delight to handle such specimens. The splendid green lustre of the plumage, minus the purple barring, the fine texture, five pointed combs, the beautiful grace of the sweep from neck to tail, indicated the highest art in breeding such a magnificent fowl as the Langshan. To Miss Croad and later to Franklin L. Sewell, Kirby & Smith, Dr. Robinson and Dr. Lea much of the early popularity and beauty of the exhibits of black Langshans was due. We do not believe a greater monument can be erected to the memory of the kindly and broad minded lady, Miss Croad, than the historical fact of her having maintained in its purity the grandest black fowl ever produced.

John L. Cost Dead.

It is with profound regret that we announce the death of Mr. John L. Cost, the Superintendent of the great Hagerstown Show. Mr. Cost was stricken down with heart disease on Friday, April 7, 1905, and was buried Tuesday, April 11th. The fraternity will greatly miss him, and we might term his loss a great calamity in the poultry and pigeon worlds. His active, generous career with his fellows has left a high ideal for us all to follow. There will be the main chair vacant at the coming Golden Jubilee of the Great Hagerstown Show. His gain is our loss.

It was a red-letter day at Pittsburg for the A. P. A. In fact, everything was red, even the wall paper in the room where the meeting was held.

After listening to all the red talk, one member remarked that he was a circulating library, he was so well red.

Another member ventured the opinion that the whole thing was an hallucination of red, and it gave him the pink-eye.

President Orr complained of a headache. Between his rulings and Secretary Orr's pink tea interruptions it was no wonder he had a pain. And there were others.

A new passage of Shakespeare or Bacon discovered by McGrew, viz: "Gentlemen, I am mad; yes, mad, sir; forsooth, mad clean through." All on account of one Orr putting his oar in another Orr's business. A rather dis-or-derly proceeding or a case of too much Orr and oar.

The Hon. "Joe" Hilldorfer called the chair down in true Keystone State parliamentary style. Joe is very sincere and vigorous in his statements.

The American Red contingent was well fortified with legal talent, which made the morning session as interesting as an adding machine.

"Big Theo." Hewes made a clever defense of the two members of the publication committee who were accused of holding up the Standard, etc. There was more truth than fiction in what he said.

Herr Julius Frank, of Akron, Ohio, just got mad once or twice, and yelled "question" a dozen times. But "Uncle Jule" carried his point all the same.

The Cornell Incubator Company was well represented by E. G. Wyckoff, P. K. Clymer, H. H. Blackman, and W. C. Denny, and presented a solid front when it came to voting.

There was a continuous performance at a vaudeville show opposite the Hotel Antler. But the continuous performance in the latter eclipsed the former in length if not in popularity.

Senator A. F. Cooper and Editor W. C. Pierce were the Damon and Pythias of the crowd. They ate and slept together and talked until they were red in the face.

"Bill Nye" Shureman, of Commercial Poultry, never said a word during the whole meeting. He will break loose in next month's issue of his paper, however.

It looked at one time as if the meeting would last all week, but the price of rooms and grub at the Antler put a crimp in the backs of the members, and they hustled to do business so as to save walking home.

After the battle was over everybody felt relieved, and, frankly speaking, also felt sorry for Mr. Baerman. The latter certainly received a very spuare deal and a fair hearing.

The Rhode Island Red "big four," Bryant, Aldrich, Tompkins and Shove, took a flyer to Washington on their way back to Boston, and enjoyed the sights of the Capital City for several days.

The definition of the shape of an American Red is given as being a bird of horizontal curves. This is certainly a rara avis.

A poultry publishers and editors' association was formed, so look out for some interesting doings in the future.

The Pittsburg trio, Selden, Hilldorfer and Skiles, made it pleasant and interesting for visiting members and did the hospitality act in their usual fine style.

There were a few axes to be ground by several interested parties, but the grindstone gave out in the afternoon, and the choppers went home peacefully.

The Western editorial brigade made a raid on Orchard Hill Farm at Sewickley with their cameras, and some of the members visited Secretary Orr's plant at Beaver before leaving for home.

The next annual meeting promises to be a warm proposition, and will be largely attended. The feeling is almost unanimous in favor of New York City as the next meeting place. There are a few Denverites and Porkopolians, however, who would like a trip to Colorado or to Cincinnati. The business ahead demands the largest attendance of members, and the metropolis of America is the spot where the clans will gather in numbers larger than ever before. Furthermore, important legislation is promised at this meeting which will place the American Poultry Association on a sound business basis by making it an incorporated body.

The wise man in the Hub is now favoring club standards and thinks it a good scheme, but sarcastically asks: "How dare anyone suggest such treason to the A. P. A.?" There are some traitors in the poultry fancy capable of doing most anything and perhaps a few exist in the American Poultry Association that would use the latter to serve their designs.

We have not heard a word from that cooping committee at St. Louis. It is about time for Mr. Stemmesch to make a report. In order to help him out and give our readers a few facts we present the following figures: Total amount received from entry fees, $7,700; disbursements, $6,000. The cost of the 4,000 new coops (?) was 45 cents each. About 2,500 coops were rented from the Chicago Poultry Association at 10 cents a coop, the freight being $26. One thousand coops were rented from the Indianapolis show managers, and we believe a similar number was secured from Kansas City. Cincinnati furnished the pigeon coops. The bill for feeding the birds was about $700, so we are informed. What the committee of three received for their work we do not know. The above figures, however, give a fair idea of the business transacted by this committee. Spratts would have cooped the show and fed the birds for 60 cents a coop. It is up to Col. Mills to give the exact figures, as we understand Mr. Steinmesch will only report to him. The fair closed over four months ago, so there has been ample time to get the books in shape.

The dates of the Poughkeepsie, N. Y., show have been fixed for September 26, 27, 28 and 29. This is one of the greatest and best fall shows of poultry held in the Empire State; in fact, in the United States. The management is excellent, the premiums large, the classification liberal, and the treatment accorded to visiting fanciers most hospitable. Secretary Booth and the veteran Superintendent Van Wyck are the magnets that draw. It takes good birds to win at the famous Duchess County Fair. That is why the leading strings are found there every year.

It is reported that all poultry and pigeon prizes won at the World's Fair, St. Louis, have been paid. This is good news. Now let us have the report of the committee of three regarding the cooping and feeding at the World's Fair. The exhibitors that paid the one-dollar entry fee are entitled to know what became of the fund subscribed by them. This is a momentous question which, "like Banquo's Ghost will not down."

There are some good people highly exercised over re-judging birds. They write plausibly and gibly denouncing the procedure that enables an American citizen, well and duty qualified, to express an honest opinion on the work they have done and will do in the show-room, as Judges. If the same aggrieved parties will write about what they know of pre-judging fowls, it would make much more interesting reading. Later on we will give a few facts regarding what we claim is the worst abuse of the show-room, viz: pre-judging fowls. By that, we mean the sale of birds by a judge to exhibitors at a show where he is to judge.

Good stock, especially chickens, cannot be raised to advantage on poor soil. The artificial supply, deficient in the soil, provided to growing stock may act as a decided help in producing well-grown birds, but the cost is often greater than the value of the results achieved.

Gallery of Fame.

PHILANDER WILLIAMS

The portrait of Philander Williams shown above will be recognized by many thousands of our readers. He is posed in an attitude that is life-like and attractive; it shows him talking to his friends about those autocrats of poultrydom, the Light Brahmas, and he is telling just how they were made, how they have lived, and how they will continue to thrive in the future. Mr. Williams has been a breeder of thoroughbred poultry ever since he has known anything, and his love for the feathered beauties is as fervent today as it ever was. The American Fancier wishes him many more happy days with his feathered beauties.

The most profitable duck to raise for the winter market is the Rouen. We found this out nearly twenty years ago. Recently imported Rouen ducks, properly dressed and fattened, brought six dollars or more a pair. French poulterers are not only adepts in the art of breeding, feeding and preparing poultry for market, but have a winning way of impressing rich American epicures of the surpassing quality of their wares. No doubt the same results can be obtained in this country, provided the same care and time is devoted to the products as our Gallic friends exercise. We regret to say that there is some very poor poultry placed on sale, albeit it has yellow skin and legs and looks plump. There is a very decided difference "twixt" looks and quality.

The whole trouble seems to be, we are too long on the theory and prejudice, and too short on experience and real knowledge as to the exacting demands of an educated market. Shipping selected apples and melons in clean neat crates has opened the eyes of the dealers, but the fog has not been lifted from the eyes of the hayseed farmer that places only the good apples on the top of the barrel. But the time is at hand when the progressive fruit grower and poultry raiser will reap the reward of his intelligent labor and honesty by catering to the advanced tastes and changed conditions of modern marketing.

The multiplication of varieties of poultry in this country is liable to create no end of trouble in the future, if each and every claimant is to be admitted to the American Standard of Perfection. A distinct new variety, once established, and reproducing itself according to the laws that govern standard bred races of fowl should have no difficulty in finding a place between the covers of the book. But the mere duplication of varieties, with only comb variations, will sooner or later create confusion and destroy the real purport and intent of the Standard.

The Wyandotte family has been multiplied quite to the limit, and the end is not yet. We may expect to hear of Dominique, Motted, White-laced Black or Birchen and Pyle Wyandottes, all ready to jump into the band wagon and travel with the old Wyandotte family. The Columbian Wyandotte, a really fine and meritorious variety, that has been bred many years, has not yet appeared through its sponsors for a place in the Wyandotte list. And it has just as good and even stronger claims to a place there than some of the favored ones now enrolled. We do honestly think and believe that Columbian Wyandotte breeders will do well in dropping the "Wyandotte" and sticking to the "Columbian." It is an American variety and a very good one, and "Columbian" is a very good name to tie to.

Mr. E. G. Roberts claims to have won the largest sum in prize money at the St. Louis Fair, his cash winnings amounting to seven hundred and ninety dollars. Surely he deserved it all, for he was most obliging at all times to those in charge and to other exhibitors. There were a lot of good fellows amongst the exhibitors at St. Louis.

The coming bantam is the White Wyandottes. It is being perfected in several quarters of the United States and when it appears in the show-room will not disgrace its famous prototype—the popular and useful White Wyandotte.

JOHN L. COST.

Official Notice.

ORR'S MILLS, N. Y., April 10, 1905.

Editor American Fancier:

I am just in receipt of a telegram announcing the death of Mr. John L. Cost, and words can not describe the pain and sorrow that it causes me. I can hardly believe it. We have sustained a great loss, both in a personal and fraternal way. I consider it a national loss, and as President of the American Poultry Association I appoint Mr. Geo. E. Howard, Mr. Geo. O. Brown, and Mr. J. H. Drevenstedt to draw up resolutions of sympathy, the same to be spread on the minutes of the Association, published in the poultry press and a copy sent to the family.

D. LINCOLN ORR,
President American
Poultry Association.

A Noble Man.

A noble man, with a legion of friends. A man whom the entire poultry fraternity will sadly miss. By his honesty, earnestness, sincerity and ambition he was a veritable leader of men. His sterling qualities as a true gentleman and an ardent poultry fancier stamped him with characteristic individuality. To know him well was to love him with an affection seldom existing between men. Perhaps my acquaintance with him was longer than that of any other poultry fancier. During all the years he was the same, undeviating and earnest, always with a host of friends. Such a man was our John L. Cost, who was so suddenly summoned to the Great Beyond. His death will cause silent tears from many fanciers. We can all remember him with a love in our hearts that knows no passing. He has gone to that Better Land, where I hope we all may meet him in glory. God bless his dear soul.

Australian Laying Competition

"I have just received from Secretary Dunnicliffe, the report for the month of February, the eleventh month of the competition. There was considerable shifting about in the positions of the various pens.

"For the first time Mrs. Hansel's Rose Comb Brown Leghorns have lost their place as leaders among the American pens, falling from 6th place in December to 9th at the end of February. J. Monroe Anderson's Rose Comb White Leghorns stood 4th at the date of this report with a credit of 1,092 eggs for the six hens. A pen of Silver Wyandottes was in the lead with a credit of 1,151 eggs. These birds were bred and entered by the same man who won last year. This pen was followed by two pens of White Leghorns with credits of 1,133 and 1,116 eggs respectively. Then came Anderson's pen referred to above, and 5th was a pen of Black Orpingtons with 1,078 eggs to its credit. Of the 18 pens of White Leghorns entered we find them in this order in the list, numbering from the highest to the lowest: 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 11, 16, 17, 20, 27, 30, 32, 78, 81, 82, 85, 93. The 28 pens of Orpingtons in the competition rank as follows: 5, 14, 15, 18, 22, 23, 24, 29, 31, 37, 39, 42, 46, 47, 48, 49, 52, 53, 54, 58, 60, 61, 62, 65, 67, 68, 88, 89, 97. This includes all varieties of Orpingtons, and the reports show the varieties to be very evenly distributed down the list. The pen standing 5th is made up of Black Orpingtons with a credit of 1,078 eggs. The one ranking 97th is Buff, with a credit of 652 eggs. The best Buff Orpington pen, ranking 31st, is credited with 905 eggs, and the pen of poorest Blacks is 88th, with a credit of 713 eggs. Silver Wyandottes rank as follows in the report: 1, 21, 26, 40, 50, 55, 56, 59, 70, 72, 73, 75, 76, 84, 92, 95, 99.

PRACTICAL POINTERS

It really ought not to be much trouble to raise and care for poultry in these days of handy appliances; there is nothing one can think of but what is on the market in some convenient up-to-date form. The business is growing and assuming a definite and fixed position both as a money maker and a diversion, also, as a help to carve out that living said to be owing to each individual by the world-at-large. One reason why the business is growing so steadily is the attractive prices, commercially, commanded by poultry and eggs.

The subject of dressing poultry needs more attention, especially the preparation preceding killing. A fowl must first be conditioned, but I do not think we all understand the subject fully and under estimate its importance. There are certain sure and quick methods of fattening, not generally practiced, also few have given attention to suitable pens built for fattening purposes; but poultry raisers will get around to these things in time. Once a grower finds a customer willing to pay for his extra trouble, he will do some tall hustling to supply him with all he will take.

The size of eggs, too, needs attention. For years there has been a lot of hollering that eggs should be sold by weight, by a lot of wind jammers and space writers short of a subject. It is not necessary to bring the scales into the case; the poultryman, by selection, can reach the desired result. There has been a general improvement in size, more noticeable in some flocks than in others, it is true, and in many cases due to the use of the trap nest, the first automatic detector of the old hen's ability both as a regular layer and the size of the egg she lays.

A man, handy with tools, can, with a little lumber, do away with the cumbersome nest of today, and substitute a row more practical and better fitted for every-day use.

One advantage of the trap nest is it induces more handling of the fowls, and it certainly is a pleasure to witness an expert at work among his hens. With deftness and a quickness learned by every-day practice he will read the identifying number on the leg band and turn her loose in an instant without so much as a squawk. Such a flock is bound to do well, the hens will have confidence in their caretaker and will respond readily at the egg basket.

Dirty eggs are a disgrace to any ranch. Of course, we must have mud in the spring, but drain the yards and remove the eggs often. The first bloom of freshness never returns; once it is lost all the scouring in the world will not bring it back.

The general demand is for an egg just as it leaves the nest for table purposes, but do you know an egg a week old, kept at an even temperature, not above fifty degrees, is much more preferable.

The incubator can play an important part in the raising of the season's poultry on farms and small plants than it does at present. Successful raising seems to be more difficult than successful hatching. A small incubator can be had for a song. Set a half dozen hens at the same time. On the evening of the sixth day, candle all, remove the infertile eggs from under the hens and fill their nests with fertile eggs from the incubator. Now set another half-dozen hens and refill the incubator. This might be called a continuous performance, and moving things along with a rush, but twice as much can be accomplished as in the regular way.

Just before the hens hatch rid them of lice. When I say rid them of lice, I mean to do an effective job. When the chicks are out give all to the most motherly hens and reset the others or turn them into the laying pens.

Brooders are all right; we have to have them, and must, for the success of our business, if on a larger scale, make a success with them, but the ordinary every-day small breeder will find the former method with hens more successful. A lot of chilled or baked chickens with bowel disease and indigestion is not a profitable business venture, and until we understand how to imitate nature perfectly only half success can be obtained.

It is always a pleasure to chronicle any progress made in poultry culture, and to describe the workings of any farm, where they do things. Through the courtesy of Mr. Austin G. Brown, manager of the Lakewood Farms Company, I have before me a complete description of the place. I also received from the same gentleman several days ago a little framed memento of the subject that led up to our acquaintance, as it pictured us in the act of eating our own words, i. e., partaking of a dish of "crow"—the less said the better.

This farm consists of sixty acres at Burrsville, a short distance from Lakewood, N. J., and is credited here in New York with receiving the highest price for eggs at wholesale during the present winter that were reported to trade circles.

Lakewood Farm devotes all its energies to the production of White Leghorn eggs, warranted not only strictly fresh and sterile, but absolutely free from bacilli. Bacilli seems to be the bane of the present generation. At present some 3,000 hens are producing eggs that are destined for the Lakewood and New York market for some fortunate man's breakfast next day but one after they are laid.

According to the Lakewood Farm theory, an egg that is more than three days old is not fit to eat.

Approaching the Farm one sees on one side of the road a large field through which are scattered small two-story houses. These houses contain young pullets before they reach laying age and here they are left to grow and thrive and enjoy life's young dream.

On the other side of the road is the farm house, back of which are numerous buildings, consisting of barns, feed and poultry houses.

In the pine wood surrounding the farm you find colony after colony filled with young birds, the underbrush and leaf mold are hardly cleared away and they furnish a nice nesting place for the worms and insects which add variety to the growing pullets' menu.

Perhaps the most noticeable thing as one goes around from brooder and breeding houses, to the many laying and colony houses, is the spotless cleanliness of everything. There are no bad odors, there is none of that unpleasant chicken smell, nothing but the rather pleasant odor of feed and hay.

Of course, the fact that the birds are all white adds to the visible effect of cleanliness, but it contributes nothing to the olfactory effect. White birds can be just as odorous as black, yellow or mottled ones, but it is upon this cleanliness of food and lodging that Lakewood Farm largely relies for making good their guarantee of freedom from bacilli.

They believe emphatically that prevention is better than cure. They do not attempt to clean up dirty birds, nor yet to restore sickly ones. By providing large-boned, vigorous breeding stock that has never known sickness and by scrupulously avoiding improper matings of breeding birds, they see to it that none of their birds are born to disease. By that constant vigilance which is the price of success, care is taken that none of them achieve vermin and by continued watchfulness as to their food none of them have germs of any sort thrust upon them.

The feed house contains row upon row of bins and bags of more different sorts of chicken feed than are dreamed of. For the little chicks a mixture that seems to consist largely of hemp and looks like the familiar canary bird seed. For the growing birds and laying hens, mixtures of wheat, corn, oats, rye, buckwheat, etc., everything in the grain line that can contribute variety, and there are bins of clover and alfalfa.

Grasses and clovers do not grow in Jersey sand, so the chicks and hens are given plenty of these prepared grasses which are grown in the heavy fertile lands of northern New York State. In the early spring and summer rye can be easily raised on our Jersey soil and it makes the best of green food. Such are the methods by which the hens are protected from disease, watched over by their attendants, and by which the eggs are produced free from all sources of contagion.

The water comes from driven wells and is pure and soft.

The open winters allow the hens to spend the daylight in the open air. Lakewood climate is renowned for its soft, balmy, bracing air and its health-giving properties are appreciated by physicians, invalids and persons convalescing.

In starting this farm a number of years ago the White Leghorn that laid the foundation of the now famous laying strain, was purchased by the largest, strongest, best-shaped, big-boned birds that could be found in this country, each and every bird being personally selected. A shape and style of Leghorn was then adopted which the Farm wished to produce and improve.

They adopted a shape that gives a well-rounded, full breast carried well forward, a good length of back rising in a conclave sweep to the tail which is carried rather low with a good spread. A Leghorn built on these lines you will find has plenty of room for heart and lung capacity, has a good digestion and its egg organs are of the normal size for laying the large white eggs which a Leghorn should lay.

The Farm now has hens in their breeding houses weighing six pounds. When you take in consideration that the average weight of a Leghorn is from three to four pounds you can easily see how great a gain has been made.

The egg yield per hen is increasing yearly as well as the size of the egg. The hens are raised according to natural laws. The result is that they are fully developed and hardy, free from disease and contagion.

NOTES FROM —CANADA—

The poultry committe of Canada's greatest fair, Toronto, met in the offices of the association, on Monday, March 27, when the following additions, alterations and list of judges were recommended for adoption by the board, for their forthcoming exhibition in the latter part of August.

The new classes added were Rhode Island Reds, Rose Comb Black Minorcas, Golden Bearded Polands, Brahma Bantams, Black Japanese Bantams and Call Ducks. In the pigeon department Bald Tumblers were given an additional class and now reads Black and A. O. C.; in Swallow classes cocks and hens will compete separately. In Canaries two classes were added for German Singers and Lancashire Coppy.

Judging is to commence promptly at 8 a. m., Saturday, September 2, all exhibitors to be excluded until judging is completed.

When there are twenty-one entries or over in a class there will be six prizes, viz: $4, $3, $2, $1., 75c., 50c.; an additional medal is offered on best collection of Cochins; it will now read Buff Cochins and Cochins A. O. C. Also a medal for best collection of Rose Comb White Leghorns and one for Rose Comb Browns are offered.

The judges are: S. Butterfield, Windsor, Ontario, for Hamburgs, Dorkings, Partridge Cochins and Ornamental Bantams. L. G. Jarvis, Montreal, Quebec, for Turkeys, Geese, and Ducks, Polands, French, Silkies, Sultans, and A. O. V. R. Oke, London, Ontario, for Orpingtons, Brahmas, Langshans, and Cochins, except Partridge. J. H. Drevenstedt, Johnstown, N. Y., for Wyandottes, Javas and Rhode Island Reds. J. E. Bennett, Toronto Ontario, for all varieties Plymouth Rocks. Geo. Burgott, Lawton Station, N. Y., for all varieties Leghorns. Geo. H. Northrup, Raceville, N. Y., for Minorcas, Andalusians, and Spanish. A. F. Pierce, Winchester, N. H., for Games and Game Bantams. W. Tregwin, R. Scott, C. F. Wagner, Toronto, Ontario, and K. J. Mair, Chicago, Ill., for all varieties pigeons. W. Tregwin, Toronto, Ontario, for Pet Stock. Dr. Boultree, Toronto, Ontario, for Cage Birds. W. Barber, Toronto Ontario, for Dressed Poultry.

Nearly all the specialty clubs in America, both of poultry and pigeons, have donated special prizes in cash, ribbons or cups, and all are not heard from yet. With its liberal prize money and good classification it should be an inducement to United States breeders to make a good entry. You will receive a hearty welcome. Come over and see the greatest exhibition held on the American continent. If you do not believe me, ask Drew.

The Western Fair, London, poultry exhibit wek following Toronto; they also have a good classification. London is the hot bed of the fancy in Canada. The judges on poultry are S. Butterfield, Windsor, L. G. Jarvis, Montreal, and L. H. Smelt, Woodstock.

Reports from breeders in this district are quite favorable, and the indications are there will be the usual crop. The weather conditions have been most favorable to early broods, 75 in the shade the past week.

Clarke versus Felch.

In the American Fancier, of March 25, Uncle Isaac calls atention to the errors of A. P. A. advocates throwing out "American Reds" and believes that the Black Plymouth Rocks should be forced into the Java class. The latter suggestion seems so sound that one wonders why the same plan is not advocated in dealing with the various kinds of new-fangled Reds. Some could pass for Buff Wyandottes, others for Buff Rocks, then eat the balance and avoid all trouble. This plan effectively disposed of the White Java some years ago, and time has surely shown the wisdom of the procedure.

There are other breeds in the Standard which could with profit be sorted out and bunched. Why not combine the Cochin and Langshan classes, making all whites conform to the Cochin type and blacks to the Langshan? This idea was the subject of much bitter controversy a quarter of a century ago, but there is no such feeling now, and the change would be of great benefit when once accomplished. Same way in the Mediterranean class. The Black Leghorn has practically passed away and the White Minorca never was a success in this country. Throw out the dead ones and bring together the live varieties. "But they are separate breeds," some one will suggest, "absolutely distinct both in type and origin." So were the old Golden Pheasants, Mooneys and Bolton Bays when all were brought together under the name Hamburg, and every reason for consolidation which may have existed in those early days of the fancy, is even more insistent now. Coming to modern productions, think of the Orpingtons, rather unnecessary varieties anyhow, each color containing blood-elements different from the others, yet all now known by the same name—for business reasons.

Rose Comb Minorcas will doubtless follow Pea Comb Cochins in time, and penciling in Wyandottes seems destined to enjoy a period of popularity about equal to that of the Dominique color in Leghorns. But why permit all these foolish little freaks and fads of fashion to run their course and finally die of old age? Why not stop them at the start, as was done with White Spanish, thus keeping down the number of breeds and the size of the standard? "Kill the culls" is a good rule to apply to varieties as well as to specimens, and even if the Standard is fixed for a five-year term, it will do no harm now to think of the future.

DR. H. P. CLARKE.

What has become of the challenge that M. F. Delano, of Millville, N. J., sent to U. R. Fishel, of Hope, Indiana, to show a string of white Plymouth Rocks for the world's championship at some great show next season?

Alfalfa for Laying Hens.

Nothing in the way of green food is as valuable as an addition to the ration of the laying hen as alfalfa. This is a species of clover that contains more protein than does any other like kind of food. Alfalfa can be cut into very short pieces and used as a litter in the laying pens or basketfuls of it can be dumped in once or twice a week. It can be used as a rough food, to be scratched over and eaten up by the poultry to good advantage. Where alfalfa can be grown, three or four crops per season may be cut off the same land. Everyone should endeavor to grow some of this valuable product. When once started, it is much easier managed than is clover. The chemical analysis of clover and alfalfa are as follows: Clover contains 6.8 per cent. protein. Alfalfa contains 16.15 per cent. protein. In carbohydrates and fat they are about equal.

Partridge Cochins have the reputation of being better egg producers than are any others. This may have been true when they had less Cochin type and feather, but now they are all about alike as to this, the more profusely they are feathered the less eggs will they produce.

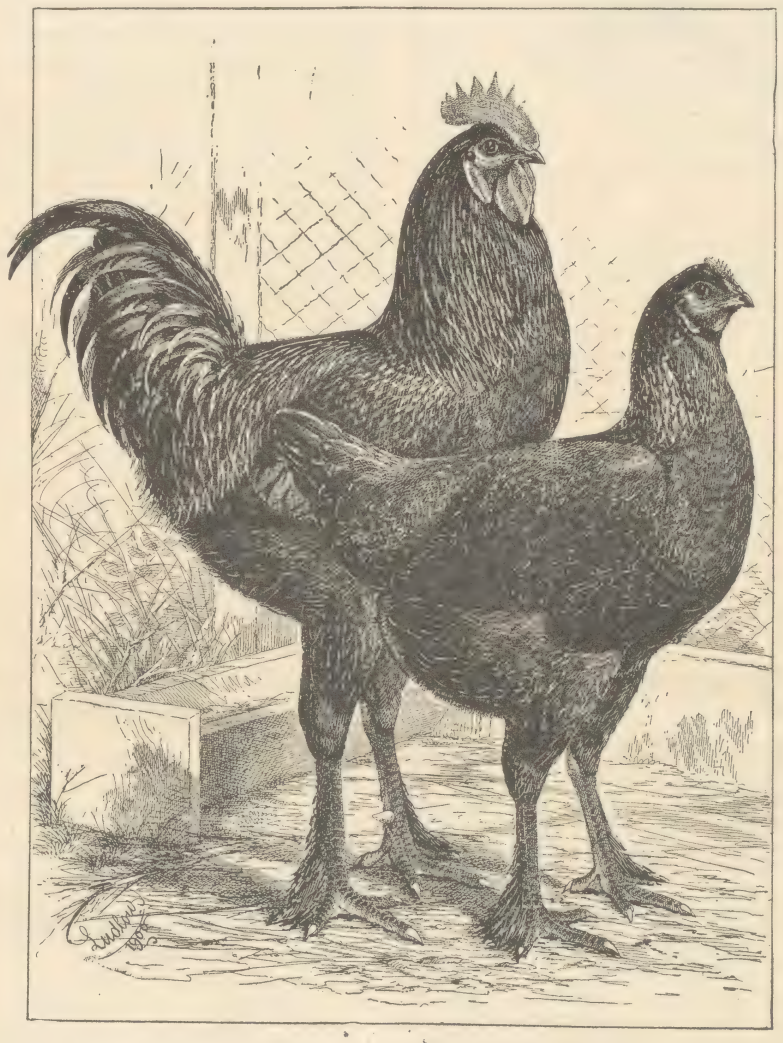
Miss Croad's Last Article



The following was intended for publication in The American Fancier by the late Miss Croad, who died on March 8th, 1905, at the age of 79. Although the article is evidently unfinished, it is thought advisable to publish it as having interest not merely from Miss Croad's experience with Langshans, but also as it was especially written for this paper, and was among one of the last things accomplished in a very active life:

"Although I have never visited China, it seems a life time since I commenced my weekly correspondence with that country, and on the 14th of February, this year (1905), it will be thirty-three years ago that we greeted the arrival of our first Langshans from the district that bears their name. As there has been so much controversy over our Langshans I have decided to give all particulars regarding our connection with the breed. Our first importation was not originally intended for us, but for the rector of the parish where we were living when my brother visited us in 1870. But our rector before this had exchanged his living for one in a distant parish, and we ourselves had also removed the stakes of our tent and had taken a house with some land attached to it a few miles from Worthing.

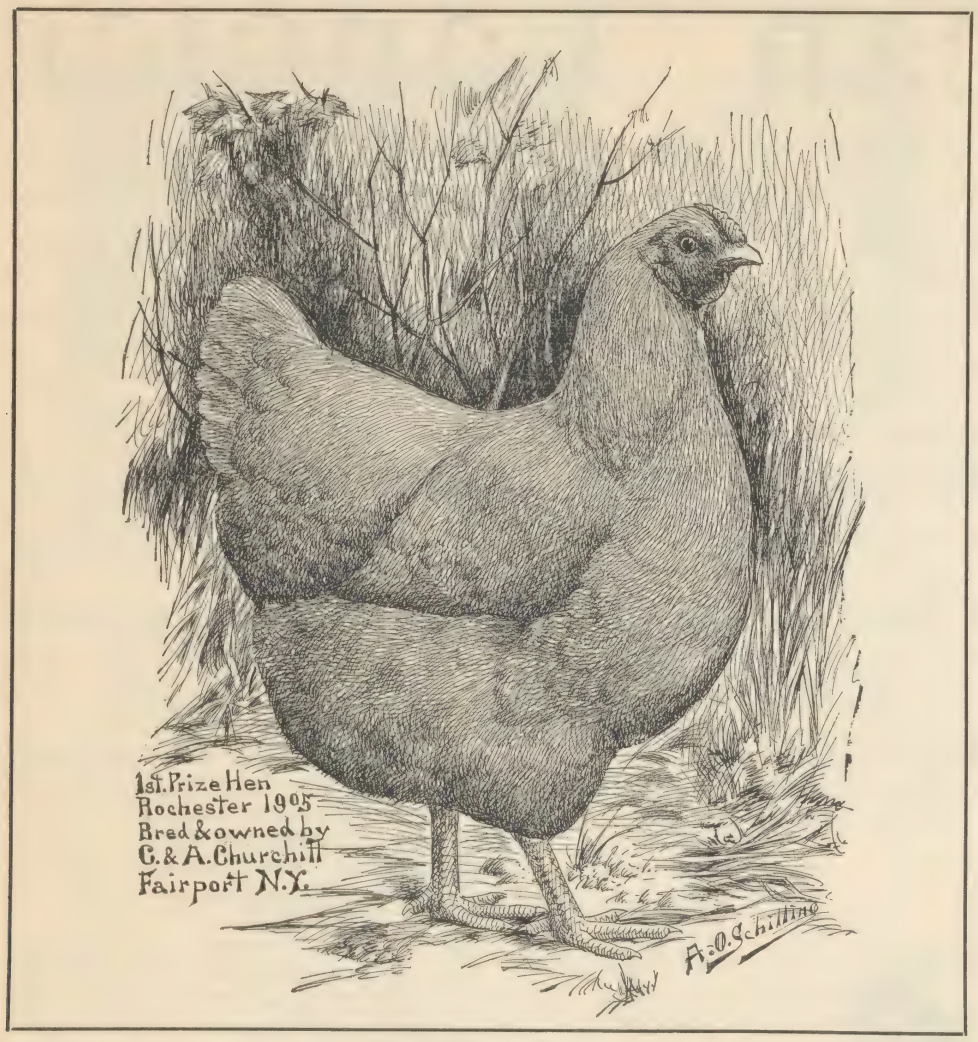
"My brother, who had for some time been located in China, was always delighted to send us choice specimen of objects which surrounded his distant home, and decided to send us his recent purchase, which he told us had lately been brought to the notice of the foreign community in China. He sent the birds to my uncle, who was an invalid. The sailor son of an old friend (a Worthing postman), fetched the birds from the docks. Their arrival created a small sensation among our country neighbors, some of whom congratulated us on our black 'Dorkings,' but a naval friend who had served in China during the war, and since his retirement had taken to poultry keeping as a hobby, told us he had never seen any birds like them either in China or England, and strongly advised us to exhibit them at the Crystal Palace Show, which in 1872 was entering on its third year.

"After some consideration we wrote to the Crystal Palace poultry authorities, giving a description of the breed, and asking whether they were known to this country. One of the secretaries replied, saying that Major Croad was evidently in possession of a breed that had never appeared in England, and strongly encouraged us to send some specimen for exposition at their forthcoming show, and this we accordingly did. I think we must have thoroughly proved our novitiate by the imported birds we sent up to this show, for they were in a miserable state of moult, but our young birds have never been surpassed and they brought back a V. H. C. After the return of our exhibits we wrote to inquire what had been thought of them. To this letter we received no reply.

"In the following May we received a visit from a gentleman who had acted as secretary for one of the shows at which our birds had appeared, and he told us that the 'Authorities' had decided that they were Black Cochins, and that a gentleman visitor had offered to give a cup for them if the secretaries would provide a class for the breed at the next Crystal Palace Show (1873). We were all novices at poultry keeping. It is true my uncle had kept a few Malays whilst at St. Helena, but that had been long ago, between 1815 and 1821. My brother, although a great lover of animals, was not in a position to undertake poultry farming. We therefore had all to learn. Under these circumstances we naturally concluded that Langshans must have appeared in England previous to the importation sent to Major Croad and exhibited by him at the Crystal Palace in 1872. It was also evident that our young birds had induced the class given by the Crystal Palace Poultry Company in 1873. We had therefore no hesitation in sending specimens of the breed to compete for the cups that had been offered, and it was the poultry reports on the birds that we sent up to this show that convinced us that the Langshan was not allied to the Cochin family. The class was exhibited in pairs, and comprised 16 entries, to which we contributed three. Although the judges had insisted that our birds were Cochins, they found no point of resemblance to the Cochin in them. The report on the show declared that their beaks and legs should have been yellow or dusky yellow, and that their tails should have been almost conspicuous by their absence, and instead of perceiving in this difference evidence of a distinct breed, they still declared the Langshan to be a Cochin. At first we were not in a position to make any comparison between these comments; that is to say, what was expected of one bird to pass muster as Cochins except the birds themselves, and I found the only point the Langshans shared in common with the Cochin was the leg feathering, but from that day I made a particular study of the Cochin, and although we never entertained one in our yard, the description given of it in books helped me considerably. I here quote from a letter that appeared in an English contemporary on Dec. 23d:

Pair English Type of Langshans, by Ludlow.

"'Mlss Watts, a former poultry editress of The Field, who must have been in the heat of the Cochin 'furore,' not only portrays the bird, but its habits. This is the description she gives of the early Cochin: "A main merit of the Cochin China is its domesticity and its happy, contented disposition, satisfied with a small run, and never seeking to roam. This is the admitted character of the bird, and it has never been known to deviate from it. We have known instances where seventy of these birds have been kept in a small yard with a grass run of three quarters of an acre, where it has been necessary to drive them forcibly out of the yard to the grass, and the owner assured us that he thought there were many parts of the field where the birds had never been." To this Miss Watts adds that the Cochin 'is a very bad forager.'



"'The habits of the Langshan are as opposed to this as is possible to be, yet we are asked to accept the tradition that the early Cochin exactly resembled the Langshan. But we were on the eve of procuring more evidence from an unexpected quarter. In 1874 the Live Stock Journal commenced its career, and a Black Cochin breeder of the day took an early opportunity to inform its readers that he had some fine young birds coming on for the next Crystal Palace Show. He concluded his letter with a "fling" at the Langshans. "As for these Langshans," he said, "they are only the waste of the Black Cochin breeders yard." However, after the Crystal Palace Show he sang to a different tune. He writes: "In looking over the Crystal Palace awards I see that you complain of my cockerel having yellow legs. I thought this to be the standard color. Your standard says they should be of a dusky yellow? What is dusky yellow?" The editor gives this foot note in reply: "In the work referred to it is expressly stated that hardly any specimens were then to be found. Since then classes have been formed, and black legs are bred for by most." You see he can give no reason for the change.

"'In striking contrast to this, I give verbatim an extract on the article on the Langshan contributed by Mr. I. K. Felch, the eminent American fancier: "Those of us who were active in poultry culture at that time remember the bitter antagonism exhibited toward the Langshan by those breeders then trying to make the Black Cochin popular, they terming these new importations as crude and indifferently bred Cochins, but they reckoned badly for they lived to see these black additions to our list prove beyond dispute a difference in type and exhibit more decided and brilliant color, which secured for them the appellation of 'Black Diamond' in poultry culture. Clandestine use of them as crosses with the Cochin, both in England and America, in the hope of improving the color of their plumage, brought to the breeder thus working the chagrin of seeing the Cochin character and colors of shanks and feet absorbed by the Langshan instead, and in the end forcing him to acknowledge their superior strength of blood and breeding, the Langshan establishing itself as a thoroughbred of decided type and color, and maintaining its decided merit as a producer of eggs, taking rank as the best layer among the Asiatics."

"'It seems marvellous that American fanciers should have been enabled to grasp these truths whilst a section of the 'English Fancy' still refuse to accept them.

"In December, 1875, the editor of the Buff Wyandotte.

Live Stock Journal, in answer to an inquiry as to what the Langshan was, said: 'The accounts you have read are from interested parties. We long ago wrote that we could see no distinction between them (the Langshan) and Black Cochins.' This was after the letter had appeared in The Field giving an account of the birds brought from China by Captain Arthur, of the 'Iron Duke.' By-the-bye, I have lately been told that Port Arthur, where one of the world's greatest battles is being fought out, owes its name to the Captain Arthur of the 'Iron Duke,' who brought the birds from China that opened a way for the Langshan to declare itself, and induced us to give the classes for the breed at the Crystal Palace in 1876, when the Langshan for the first time stood on its own merits, and it was the abuse heaped upon our bird at this show that led to the first Langshan club being established.

"Mr. Wright reported on our birds at the show that they were the least lustrous and dingiest, either in the Langshan or Black Cochin classes. In a book, published (I think, in 1901), he repeated this critic on our birds, as though it embodied the truth, but fortunately he added this postscript: 'The birds referred to were adults out of condition.' Now, it so happens that we only had young birds at this show. A pair of them we parted with to a Mr. Frank Nunn, who in December of 1876, the month following the Crystal Palace Show, won first with them at Cambridge, and first and second at six consecutive shows.

"We were at first under the impression that the Langshan had spread itself all over the North of China, but a study of the map of that country showed us its immense extent ('one twelfth of the globe's surfce'), and convinced us of the improbability of this. Besides this, we sent a copy of my first edition of 'The Langshan Fowl' to an old friend in the Marine Survey, etc., of which Sir Robert is Chief Commissioner, and he assured me that the breed was strictly confined to the Langshan district. He told me the duties of his office had obliged him to travel thousands of miles in all directions, and that he had never met with the Langshan in any other part. except by importation. I am writing of what occurred twenty-seven years ago. We have had several importations, but it is many years since the last arrived, and time, we know, brings many changes. Our friend, after forty years' service, is now in England seeking a well earned rest, which I do not intend to disturb by intruding my Langshan affairs."

Australian Test.

As the time approaches for the closing of the Australian Egg Test for the past year, which we believe ends with the last day of March, renewed interest is centered about this trial. The fowls that were sent from America to compete have done remarkably well. It was not expected that they would gain the highest position, after traveling as they did so many miles, going into a strange climate. As they were not acclimated, to have done as well as they have done is a remarkably strong compliment to the egg producing qualities of our American fowls. Those selected near home were simply transferred a few miles from their home to the plant where the test was carried on; this should, therefore, be considered, and at the same time all should remember that the English or the Australian officer does not fail to give his undivided attention and care to producing the best hens for the intended purpose. No country has made equal advancement with us in the improvement of poultry in the same number of years. Roll up your sleeves and keep up the good work, for America has been highly honored in the egg test.

Any old hen can lay at this season of the year, but it takes a hen indeed to lay when eggs are scarce.

Net balance	$1,429.40

Of the disposition of the new coops, will say, that notwithstanding our best efforts, we have been unable to dispose of them. We did store 2,000 of them, but the expense of handling, hauling, and storing them, will just about consume their value. About 1,000 were hauled to a country place, at an expense of $80, and the balance were abandoned at the Fair Grounds, after same were taken down. The expense of hauling and storing being more than could be realized from their sale.

It may not be out of place also to mention in connection with this statement, that the items of labor and hauling, while apparently quite large, were the usual rates, as the ordinary laborer during the World's Fair demanded $2 per day for eight hours, work, and this had to be paid. The item of hauling is heavy, for the reason that in nearly all cases, it meant a haul of from 9 to 12 miles to the Fair Grounds and the same distance back or a day's work with a regular charge of $8.00 to $10.00 per load for a two-horse team.

As to the service performed by our committee, will say that in handling 10,008 birds which we cooped, fed and watered for nearly two weeks, 6 died in the two weeks time, and one exhibitor was good enough to suggest that certainly more would have died if they had been left at home. In the handling and returning of this large number, few mistakes were made, which, however, were rectified, except in four cases. Five birds remain unaccounted for at this date, and probably we will never be able to explain this discrepancy. It is a pleasure to say, however, that the owners in these four cases have been good enough to hold the committee blameless.

In conclusion we beg to say, that while the work performed by our committee might have been improved upon, after the experience that we had, yet taking all the facts as they existed before the opening of the exhibition, we are glad to say that not one word of dissatisfaction has come to our ears from the hundreds of exhibitors who were there. On the other hand, many letters were received congratulating the committee on the largest and most successful exhibit of this kind ever held in the world, and expressing thanks for many courtesies, cordial welcome, and glad hand extended to everybody.

Yours truly,
Henry Steinmesch.

At the Poultry Show.

Chickens, geese and ganders,
Turkeys, ducks and drakes,
Have by hundreds gathered
Where intrude no fakes.
They're blue-blooded bipeds
On which feathers grow,
And they're prouly posing
At the poultry show.

Far from keeping secret
Fact that they are here
Loudly they're proclaiming
It without a fear.
From the dawn of morning
Till to sleep they go
Racket they are making
At the poultry show.

Turkeys gruffly gobble,
Geese and ganders hiss,
Ducks and drakes are quacking
In affright or bliss.
Hens are often cackling,
Roosters fiercely crow—
All are in commotion
At the poultry show.

Big and lordly roosters
Their importance shriek;
Plucky little bantams
Their defiance squeak.
Wildly they'd be battling
Could each find his foe,
But they're all in cages
At the poultry show.

At the feathered bipeds
Other bipeds stare—
Women, men and children
All find pleasure there,
Crowds of large dimensions
Saunter to and fro
And enjoy the racket
At the poultry show.

BOYER'S TALK

Table Poultry.

Four desirable points in market poultry are small bones, broad backs, plump breasts, and fine-grained meat.

The man who will kill and market sick chickens is nothing less than a criminal. We have seen chickens in market that showed every indication of having suffered with severe colds at the time they were killed.

The poor, lean carcasses go begging in market. It is a mistake to ship them. The finer grades are always in demand.

The dressed poultry trade is growing annually. The spring chicken finds its market in April and May. It is, practically, the broiler's substitute. Spring chicken and waffles is a happy combination and worth trying.

The business poultryman aims to ship each week, having a regular day for that purpose.

The trade in the Eastern markets calls for dressed broilers, which are sold by weight. In the West it is preferred to have the broiler chickens live, and they are sold by the dozen.

Every poulterer should aim to become an expert in dressing poultry. The more practice the more perfect one becomes in the art.

The wise poultryman keeps only such breeds as give him the desired results to meet his market demands. Fortunately our American breeds fill almost every requirement of all the markets throughout the United States, especially so in the production of meat.

The French system of cramming fowls to fatten them has never become popular in this country.

Had it not been for the invention of incubators and brooders, it is doubtful if the production of poultry meat would ever have become a business.

Roasting fowls weighing from three to five pounds each are most salable in our markets. Broiler prices in the Chicago market are at their best from March to July.

The meat on yarded poultry is always more tender than on fowls that have been given free range. For that reason poultry coming from a regular poultry farm is more in demand than those raised by the general farmer.

We can color the skin of our table poultry by the quality of food we give. Corn and cornmeal will add that rich golden color, while buckwheat and middlings has a tendency to whiten the skin.

Make it a rule never to ship to market such stock as you would hesitate to use on your own table.

When a shipper is disappointed at the returns, he is very apt to blame the commission merchant. Very often ignorance or carelessness on the part of the shipper are the real causes. Always write your commission man before shipping, unless you have regular weekly shipping days when he will be on the outlook for your goods, and place his trade accordingly.

When chickens become too large for broilers, they are quoted in market as "soft meated" chickens, bringing a less price than do broilers, but a shade better than is quoted for fowls.

In the Chicago markets capons sell best from November 1st to warm weather in the spring. In February the highest prices are paid. They should be dressed and weigh eight to twelve pounds each. The larger the bird the better the price. If smaller than eight pounds they will not bring a better price than that for common chickens.

Sprague, the commission man, says the best time to sell chickens is from January 1st to November 1st. During the last two months of the year nearly every one wants to sell, and consequently the market becomes overstocked.

Strolling through the markets at almost any time, one will see large quantities of extremely poor turkeys, fowls and chickens. On this subject the Rural New Yorker says it is seldom that one sees a poorly fattened hog in market. If it pays to stuff with corn a hog that will not net his feeder five cents a pound dressed, why is it not good business sense to use some of that corn to fatten a bird that will bring twice as much per pound? Will the same amount of corn make twice as much pork as of poultry? If not, it would seem wiser to put the corn where it will do the most good.

Roasting fowls that are overfed and too heavy, or that are out of proportion in the abdomen, don't sell well in the market. Soft roasters are young fowls that are hatched and grown like roasters—as fast as possible to the proper roasting size.

The New York Poultry Review calls attention to the demand for "virgin cockerels" or stags in market. These are usually made from late-hatched Brahma cockerels that are divided off from the pullets as soon as they can be told, then are raised or grown in lots of about twenty-five, and fed continually for a quick, heavy growth. These cockerels are quite as desirable for table use as are capons. In fact, they are used both as capons and roasters. When the market is right, and the best prices paid for capons, they are thus sent to the market. When it is unfavorable they are dressed as roasters and sold. The interest in growing this kind of poultry is largely on the increase, and many claim they much prefer this kind of a capon or roaster to the real capon itself. Truely there is nothing finer for a roasting fowl than a fat, well-finished young Asiatic, dressed and roasted as are turkeys. The pullets from this same grade of fowls are set apart and grown by themselves, the same manner as are the cockerels, fed on strong, rich, fattening foods, so as to hasten their growth. These sell for quite as much as do the others. In fact, these high-class pullets—plump and bright—are sold in the Eastern markets as roasters for a price about the same as must be paid for capons.

THE EGG BUSINESS.

For an egg farm to be most profitable, the good winter layers should each year be picked out, and the indifferent layers disposed of. It is not so much how many eggs a hen lays in a year, as the number she lays during the fall, winter and early spring, when the prices are best.

In serving fresh-egg trade, no egg must be marketed that is older than three days. An egg, to be strictly fresh, should not be over twenty-four hours old. A fresh-egg trade, honestly served, can always be relied upon, and will command a better price than when there is no guarantee. The writer has some city customers that are only too glad to pay from five to seven cents a dozen more for our guaranteed eggs than what the local market calls for. As gathered, the eggs should be kept in a room or dry cellar in which the temperature does not vary much from forty degrees.

At this time of the year the prices are very low, as a rule. But the man who has a regular trade must cater to it just as faithfully as he did when there was more money in it. For the past few years, the prices for eggs have been very good, and easily averaged two cents each the year around. As it costs just about half that to grow the eggs, the poultryman is still able to double his money.

Dr. P. T. Woods advises this treatment for hens that continually lay soft-shelled eggs: Ten drops of corn smut (Ustilago maydis) in a pint of drinking water. The cause of soft-shelled eggs is assigned, in many cases to a disordered condition of the oviduct, for which the above treatment is said to be a good remedy.

While come breeds are naturally better layers than other varieties, all breeds can be made good layers if they are properly bred, fed and cared for.

Sudden fright or excitement will hurt the egg yield. A good poultryman will not catch any of his fowls during the day time, if he can possibly avoid it.

Fowls become accustomed to their attendant, and readily become quite tame. It is strange, however, how the least change of clothing will be quickly detected by poultry. The writer has several pens of Light Brahmas that are regular pets, and can be picked up at any time. But the other day I donned a new pair of overalls, which were rather of a flashy yellow color. The moment I entered the hen yard the fowls became excited and would not come near me. They are more reconciled to the outfit now, although they will not venture as close as they did before I made the change. Fowls accustomed to women will often scare when men come near them, and vice versa.

Early in the season it will be noted that the color of the eggs laid by brown-egg layers is of a very rich brown order, and this becomes lighter and lighter in color as the season advances, or rather as the litter runs out. As the egg crop increases the color decreases, owing to the gradual loss of the pigment which colors the eggs.

Contentment is an egg tonic. When a hen feels at home she will busy herself and, if given a chance, will begin laying operations. If a fowl is rightly fed and cared for, and has comfortable quarters. she will be contented. Contented hens become business hens.

It is always the best plan to gather the eggs several times during the day, as very often eggs are cracked or broken when there are a number of nests.

Hens crowding on the nest is a bad practice, and increasing the number of nests will not generally remedy the matter. If a hen forms an attachment for a certain kind of a nest she will go to no other. The only way we know of to prevent this crowding is to use trap nests.

Mr. Collingwood says there is no animal mixture under the sun so intricate, so compact, so full of power and force as the egg. Science tells us that the hen gathers, mixes and puts together in organic form, 650 grains of water, 125 grains of fat, 108 grains of lime, 80 grains of albumen, 26 grains of sugar, and 10 grains of ash.

The egg farmer each year should not only pick out his best layers to breed from, but he should discard all those that do not give a good showing in January, and that do not lay proper shaped eggs. There must be quality as well as quantity. Each year in mating up our new pens, we select the hens that gave us good January laying, generally picking out twice the number we wish to keep over. Having picked out our January layers we look at the eggs these hens lay. If they have a good oval shape, are of good size and color, they indicate which hens are the most desirable to keep.

Editorial Gossip.

It is amusing to note the absolute chronic way in which Farm-Poultry endeavors to attract notice by constantly "flinging mud" at every body and everything. According to the editorial talent of the Hub's yellow-covered journal this world is all wrong and should be made over to suit its particular fancy. From one of its recent issues we take the following:

> It having been noised about that T. E. Orr, for several years past secretary-treasurer of the American Poultry Association, was a candidate for appointment to the position of Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, some who have not been deeply impressed by Mr. Orr's ability as demonstrated by his work for the A. P. A., are inclined to ridicule him as aspiring to something quite out of the range of his capacity.
> If these gentlemen will calmly and soberly consider the quality of the present Secretary of Agriculture and some others prominent in the work of that department on the basis of what they have actually done, not what they say they have done, they may conclude that Mr. Orr is peculiarly fitted for the work in that department. Of all our government departments the Department of Agriculture has been most successful in advertising itself. Its experts can grow a bigger crop of reputation from a smaller investment for achievement than any other class of government officials.

It is another one of the little plays of the editor of this all-wise publication for free advertising and at the same time to fill up space. Really, we have about come to the conclusion that our contemporary has become a joke in the community, and for this reason cannot longer take its sayings seriously. There is hardly an individual or organization, save its own gracious self, that has not come in for a share of the attacks and abuse at the hands of this all-wise editor of the Hub. It has grown to be a mania with him and the malady seems to be deep seated. Seriously speaking we fear the worst. It is unnecessary for us to say a word in defense of the gentleman he would ridicule, besides space is too valuable to devote to such a cause, but we cannot refrain from saying to the editor of Farm-Poultry that his remarks are the limit for ignorance. Sometime in the future, when space will permit, we shall point out to our misinformed contemporary some of the wonderful results and magnificent achievements accomplished by the Department of Agriculture. It will be "another way of looking at it."

Too many cooks spoil the broth and too many new breeds make the Standard too heavy to carry.

By the way, the Buckeye Reds had a narrow escape at the Pittsburg meeting, but there is plenty of time to consider their case at Hagerstown. One advocate of new breeds openly stated at Pittsburg that the variety he favored did not produce fifty per cent true to type, and claimed that many others do not. It is rather a bad job to file papers and make affidavits to the fact that an applicant can and will produce more than fifty per cent true to type and breed characteristics and then to admit in an open meeting that they will not do so. We trust that those most interested in them will be ready to prove their claim at the next meeting.

Don't let illustrations make the bird, but rather have the bird make the illustration.

In our experience of fifteen years as publishers never did the future outlook of the poultry business seem so bright. From all sides come the reports of more business than can be handled. The egg trade is enormous, and the demand for stock has exhausted the supply, and while the season is late better accounts than usual come to us as to the percentage of fertility of the egg. Good hatches are reported from all quarters and the activity in stock growing is outrunning all previous records. Never was there such a demand for appliances as now and the sale of poultry foods is most gratifying to those who sell them. All of this speaks volumes in favor of poultry culture as an established business.

The conceit in some men would stock a storage battery.

Elsewhere in this issue will be found the report of Mr. Henry Steinmesch, chairman of the cooping committee of the Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Department of the World's Fair at St. Louis. This report has been anticipated for a long time, and many will find in it much to interest them. The report is complete as rendered to Col. Chas. F. Mills, Chief Department of Live Stock, World's Fair, St. Louis. Comment seems unnecessary.

In a Western publication, Secretary Orr tells us that the Brahma has become such a high-class exhibition fowl as to have been lost sight of as a market proposition. If our dear Secretary is in earnest, we would suggest that he come a little further East and get next to the true situation of affairs. Everybody knows that Wyandottes are good, but it is not proper or just to look at all other fowls through Wyandotte eyes. While there are many varieties of Wyandottes, yet the Light Brahma will hold its own with any of them, excepting the Whites. A visit to New Jersey, New York and the whole of New England will certainly demonstrate the fact that the Brahma is a very busy business proposition.

"Anything so its red" didn't seem to go at Pittsburg.

Putting your "oar in" will in the future be used instead of "buttin' in."

The Indian Game cock that won first at Boston the past winter was a bird of truer breed characteristics than any we have seen since the one shown at the same place three winters ago, which came very near being turned down, owing to its being dubbed. Both of these birds were truly Indian Game in type, yet neither one had the finish of plumage and color that others had in the same class with them. On both occasions some objections were made to the awards, but no well-informed person would have questioned the selection on shape qualification. Color in these birds scores one third, but their real value is in their compact, heavy plump bodies, with plenty of thigh and breast, short shanks, and low-set build. Spare, tall-built fowls are not in their class.

Beware of the seductive influences of an even tongue.

We should give more thought to form and character in our breeds, and should not cater too much to color markings. Form makes the breed and color establishes the variety. This does not mean that we should lessen the quality of color, but rather to improve it in accordance with the shape or form of the breed. Shape or type is the golden value of the specimen, and this type should be so pronounced that the amateur will recognize it at a glance. There are altogether too many types of fowls. Each class should be distinct in character of form and should be so recognized.

These balmy days of spring are promises of balmier ones yet to come.

August first, nineteen hundred and five, is the date fixed by the committee of five for the issuing of the Standard of Perfection of the American Poultry Association of the United States of North America, discovered by Christopher Columbus in fourteen hundred and ninety-two, and settled thereafter by our forefathers. The above was written in one breath and we leave the points with our readers.

To sail under false shape is as bad as sailing under false colors.

"Where there's smoke there must be fire" is an old adage, and we are reasonably certain that Pittsburg came nearer burning up on April fourth than ever before in its history. If the color hadn't changed at sunset, the whole town would have been aflame before morning.

In our issue of April 8, we said that Professor Wood stated that eggs in Florida did not sell above twenty cents a dozen all winter. We should have said they did not sell below twenty cents, and as high as forty. Some time the Professor is going to tell us in an article all about the difficulties of growing poultry in the land of sunshine and oranges.

The menu of the Minneapolis meeting must have been printed in French, for those present did not seem to understand the dishes they were getting when "Buckeyes" and "American Reds" were served. The indigestibility of these two entrees should be a warning to all epicures in the future who have a hankering for new things with unknown origins.

The End Has Come.

We shall meet, but we shall miss him,
There will be a vacant chair.

Through some inexplicable cause certain men become leaders. This was strikingly true of John L. Cost, the King of the Hagerstown Poultry Show. With but little apparent effort on his part the exhibitors flocked to Hagerstown with their fowls. The fanciers gathered each returning October as if the tie that bound them was too strong to be broken; nothing could keep them away. It was not the prize money nor the attractions of the town or fair that brought them. All this could be found more conveniently in other localities. But it was in the powerful magnetism of the man that the long-continued battle cry of "On to Hagerstown" had its birth.

He, more than any one man we have ever met in the poultry business, could attract the crowds to him and hold their attention. The happiest man on earth was John L. Cost as he donned his cap and shouldered his cane each year to lead the ideal of his heart, the annual parade of visiting poultrymen to the Hagerstown Fair. The people looked forward to this as they do to Christmas, and the old veteran planned for it with the pleasure and determination of one who knew not how to fail. This same influence placed him in complete control of the Costley Fishing Club, and made him a power in the poultry fancy. But the end has come to him as it must come to all of us.

Mr. Cost was born in Washington County, Maryland, sixty-two years ago. He was an enlisted member of Company B, Eleventh Maryland Infantry, and assigned to the army of the Potomac. He loved his country as he did his home and friends. There was not the slightest spark of wavering in his nature when his home, his country and his friends were in danger. At the close of the war he affiliated with the Republican party, and up to the time of his death was an honored member of this organization, and though living in a southern Democratic atmosphere he was loved and honored by all and came very near being selected to represent his county in the State legislature.

He was much attached to the qualities of the beautiful Light Brahma, and had just returned to his home upon the farm and begun preparations for the renewal of his former task of growing poultry of the highest quality. His ailments and declining health had worried his dearest friends for a considerable length of time. It was their wish as well as his that he might live to celebrate the Golden Jubilee that had been uppermost in his heart for more than two years, but nature willed it otherwise.

Years may come and years may go, but there will never be a John L. Cost again in the American fancy. His was such a unique character, so absolutely true to nature's ideal of what constitutes a leader at a certain period in the history of the fancy, that no conditions can ever arise to bring forth another just like him. "The evil that men do lives after them; the good is often interred with their bones," is one of the Bard of Avon's famous sayings. What a difference there is in the case of the late and lamented John L. Cost! A soul of honor, determined and firm in conducting his affairs, generous and hospitable, ever ready to help the young fanciers as well as all others that exhibited or visited at the great fair at Hagerstown, made famous by him in American poultrydom. John L. Cost was respected and loved for his good qualities while living, and the good he has done will never be forgotten in this generation. He lived and died a true American, and no finer tribute can be paid to any man.

It is no easy task to build up a first-class poultry department at a county fair in the face of strong opposition by directors not interested in chickens. The glamour of the trotting track, the cattle and other live stock interests overshadow all others as a rule. Not so at Hagerstown. It was the poultry department that led all others, but it took years of hard labor to accomplish all this. The great good man who accomplished it was given hearty support by his fellow directors, and we are of the opinion that this department will be kept up to its high standard in the future and serve as a monument to the departed leader.

The winter show scheduled for the third week in January, 1906, at Atlanta, Ga., has been abandoned, a great many breeders not deeming it advisable to hold an exhibition so late in the season in the South. Furthermore, the Atlanta Poultry Association. under whose auspices the poultry show at the State Fair at Atlanta in October is held, did not think it wise to hold another one the same season. Notwithstanding this, many breeders think a show held in December would not be affected by the October function.

The Augusta, Georgia, show will be held January 8 to 12, 1906. J. W. Killingsworth continues as secretary of the Augusta Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association, an office he has filled many years with honor to his club and to himself.

The first comparison judging show in Texas will be held at Dallas January 9 to 14. Loring Brown, G. M. Kriebels and Will Purdy will do the judging. Perhaps those that clamor so loudly against comparison shows not being suitable for Southern fanciers and breeders will have an opportunity of changing their opinions, as the men back of the show evidently have the nerve and ability to make it an unqualified success.

It is a pity that some editors do not post themselves more thoroughly on what is the real cause of the delay in publishing the Standard. They would not be guilty then of unjustly blaming two members for what has been caused by a number of others and unavoidable obstacles in revising final proofs. In contrast to some of these insinuations, we print the following fair and just statement by Editor Downs in the Southern Fancier:

"The admission of the American Reds has brought forth a protest, and the matter will be considered at a meeting called for April 4, at Pittsburg, Pa. This means a further delay in the publication of the Standard of Perfection which we hoped would be ready by April 1. As it is, the work will be out too late to be of use for the present season, and it is better that these matters be fully discussed and settled, even if further delay becomes necessary."

Dr. A. W. Bell. superintendent of poultry at the great Toronto Fair to be held the last week in August and the second week in September, writes us that the judging will take place on Saturday, September 2, and that the same method will be pursued as last year; viz.: Judges begin work at 8 p. m., and are requested to get their work done at 1 p. m. During this time the building is closed to the public and exhibitors. A sufficient number of judges will be engaged to facilitate this work. The stewards will do the rest. and when the gong strikes "one" every premium card will be up and the public and exhibitors have an opportunity of viewing the winners with the additional privilege of knowing to whom they belong. American exhibitors should not fail to send birds to Toronto. It is to their interest to do so as good birds sell readily at good prices, especially birds in the American and Mediterranean classes. Last year three American judges were engaged in addition to the Canadian College of Poultry and Pigeon Adjudicators. This year we learn several more will be asked to judge special classes. There is one strong feature in the arrangement of the judging, every judge has his classes announced in advance, and exhibitors know where they are at. No danger of a canary bird judge being placed on Light Brahmas at Toronto. It is strictly a fancier's show conducted on business principles and enjoys the well-deserved reputation of being the best managed exhibition of its kind in America.

Several of the larger exhibitors at fall and winter shows, men who send valuable strings around the circuit, and who are in the business for money and not for their health, have written us regarding the matter of selecting judges at the fall fairs, and are rather bitter in their remarks regarding the appointment of incompetent men as judges because they are cheap. Remarks one: "I think it will be well for the managers of all fairs to publish the list of judges at their shows, and they had better select old stand-bys or they will be short of entries. When men attempt to judge and award a La Fleche cock a blue ribbon as a Creve Coeur, it is time to call a halt. Yet this happened the past season. Judging for meal tickets and railroad fare and crowding good men out has got to stop some time, and the sooner the better. I, for one, will not show under one of them this coming season if I know it in time. If our poultry papers would come out good and hard on the mistakes made by these novices, it would help quite a bit." The above is but a mild protest compared with what we heard on the circuit last fall. The indignation of veteran exhibitors was so great, that it is a mystery to us why secretaries of important shows should fail to heed the warnings contained in these protests against incompetent judging. These men are good losers under a qualified judge always, but draw the line on a water-fowl expert posing as a judge of Games, or whatever else he may be called upon to do, of which he knows little or nothing in fact, often frankly admitting it. The time is ripe for a great change for the better, and we trust during the coming leisure months secretaries will think hard and often before giving assignments to judges that only serve to decrease the entries in many fine varieties of poultry and pigeons.

A poultry and pet stock show will be held at Paterson, N. J., December 6 to 8. James Handford is the Secretary. This being the first exhibition of the kind ever held in the silk city should prove a drawing card and bring out big entries.

The "American Ancona Club" has just completed its organization and bids fair to bring to the front one of the best and most useful breeds of fowl in the world. As will be seen by the announcement published on another page of this issue, there are some novel ideas embodied in its rules, the most striking of which is that the catalogue will contain no advertising matter and hence will not infringe upon the legitimate advertising rights of the poultry press. Secretary J. Henry Bennett, Viroque, Wis., adds to above departure: "This no doubt is a reform that the poultry papers would welcome were it applied to all specialty clubs catalogues, many of which contain hundreds of dollars worth of advertising." Bull's eye shot, Mr. Bennett.

A score card show will be held at Pittsfield, Mass., January 24 to 26, 1906.

GEO. L. HARDING.

OUR artist has done himself proud this week when he made the accompanying portrait of Mr. Geo. L. Harding. Every reader will be pleased to make the acquaintance of the manufacturer of Uncle Sam's poultry foods and remedies. In this line Mr. Harding has scored a pronounced success, and his goods are to be found all over the country. He is progressive in his work and only handles the very best of everything for poultrymen and pigeon fanciers. Besides his business, he is a devoted admirer of the feathered tribes, and is passionately fond of all things beautiful. We wish him continued success in his work.

The Excelsior Wire and Supply Co., New York City, handle both The American Fancier and The Feather. The proprietor, Mr. W. V. Russ, informed us last week that there is a very largely increased demand for both papers in the last month.

Mr. W. J. Stanton, who has handled The American Fancier many years is another New York agent who reports "No returns. All copies sold."

We are glad to learn that the Hon. A. F. Peirce of Winchester, N. H., has been specially engaged to judge the Games and Game Bantams at Toronto, Canada. Judge Peirce should be more frequently seen at our shows. He is in a class by himself on games and Game Bantams, and bred them when some of the modern judges who never bred Game or Bantam, were being fed on Mellen's Food.

"Billy" McNeil, the sage of London, Canada, remarks in the April Canadian Poultry Review: "The Ottawa fanciers have had enough of the score-card; it's a dangerous thing in the hands of some judges, just like a razor in a child's hand." Some score cards might be compared with a safety razor, however, being adjustable and harmless.

We met a man recently that thought Buff Wyandotte or Rock fanciers made a mistake in wanting clear buff plumage. He claimed it was more natural to have black in the feathers. This statement may seem absurd to real fanciers, and no doubt it will be dismissed with a smile. Yet the man that made it is a very well known, highly advertised and prominent official in poultrydom. No wonder the fancy is floundering at the bottom of despair in some sections of the country.

The President of The American Poultry Association is up in arms over the warm time that is, and is likely to be, up to the end of his term. One might have hoped for better things under the guidance of the two Orrs, but when the rank and file would not be guided, and the secretary failed to have the standard in his vest pocket, no wonder the Buckeyes and Reds ran away with the whole meeting.

The American Fancier being devoted to standard-bred poultry, caters to all the varieties and sub-varieties recognized by progressive fanciers and breeders. That is why "everything for fanciers" is advertised in its columns.

In a Scottish exchange some years ago we find the following glowing account of Blue Andalusians: "Andalusians in Scotland are not so well known as they should be. Compared with the Minorcas they are quite as valuable as egg producers—in our opinion more so—and they present many points to breed for that are not in the Minorca. Mr. Verry gives an instance where six pullets hatched in April, mated with a cockerel on August 1, and kept until July 31 following laid 1,407 eggs, or an average of 234½ eggs per hen. The weight of Andalusian eggs from hens in their second year is two pounds per dozen. The pullets are vedy precocious, and in many instances lay their first egg before they obtain the age of four months. As table fowls they rank with the moderate class, a good cock will weigh about seven pounds, and a hen from three and a half to four and a half pounds. They dress up very plump, the flesh when cooked is white and juicy, and of delicate flavor. A bird that possesses two such sterling qualities as these deserves to receive every consideration and attention from fanciers and breeders, and ought most certainly to be placed in the front rank of our domestic poultry."

This is extraordinary praise and though we have always recognized the Andalusion as one of the best egg producers known, we hardly found it of superior merit as a table fowl, and certainly class it among the moderate, very moderate class at that. Now that the good laying qualities and handsome appearance of these fowls are being appreciated, a greater demand for them is the result.

It was in the "eighties" when we experimented with and bred Andalusians. We liked the breed and its good egg-laying qualities. But the drawback was the percentage of culls, resulting from the matings. To obtain sixty per cent. of blue birds was the limit. The rest were white, black or mottled black and white. Still we obtained a strain that in color and head points "filled the bill" to a certain extent, and had no trouble in disposing of these birds to the late J. M. Dexter, of Camden, N. J., who in turn sent us a fine pen of White Wyandottes, true sports of the famous old Silvers. Mr. Dexter a few years after disposed of the Andalusians to Mr. A. S. Blunck and the latter won many blue ribbons with the birds. We must confess that a well-bred Andalusian is one of the handsomest fowls of the Mediterranean class, and a useful one.

A prominent school for poultry culture now has under consideration the advisability of starting an experimental poultry farm in the South for the double purpose of teaching successful methods and the profitable advantages which they feel assured must come from this contemplated move. It will be to the interest of any part of the country in which they may locate to receive them with open arms and extend to the mevery possible assistance, for the successful establishment of egg-producing farms throughout the South must add considerably to the cash income of the people in the vicinity.

Another feature of poultry-growing that has come into notice is how to best succeed in the high altitudes of Arizona and other States, and upon arid lands where but little verbage of any kind will grow and where bugs and worms are scarce. Those best informed have this now under consideration, but so far the only relief offered is the growing of alfalfa by irrigation and the provision of meat food of some kind in place of worms and bugs.

The lack of moisture in the air of these high altitudes is said to add to the difficulties of artificial incubation. This has been overcome to a certain extent by keeping moisture of some kind within the machine or introducing it with the heat. All of these problems should be worked out by the Department of Agriculture in each State. The advantages to be gained by so doing are too great to be neglected, and this is gradually being recognized on all sides.

It may, per chance, be possible for one to select all the best egg producers from the others, and if so it would be most profitable, for then one might almays kill or sell to market the least desirable, reserving for layers only the best, which would truly be a blessing to poultrymen. We shall look with interest for the report from those now testing the method.

Much has been said and written pro and con the value and usefulness of specialty clubs. Of late a regular epidemic has broken out among writers, the specialty club microbe getting in its fine work in good spring fashion. Evidently there is something wrong with these clubs to judge by the many adverse comments made in print and verbally.

In conversation with a number of Western poultry editors we learn that a decided stand is being contemplated against specialty clubs as far as giving space to latter in publications is concerned. One well-known editor remarked: "Here is a club with over one thousand members gets about twelve hundred dollars worth of advertising for its catalogue and wants me to publish notices, etc., free of charge. This is the limit. Why, if I did so, readers would send for catalogue and look up advertisers in it and buy perhaps, ignoring the advertisers that pay their good money to my paper."

This places one feature of the case in a proper light, and the remedy suggested by another editor and publisher to charge specialty clubs regular advertising rates may mitigate if not entirely remedy the evil.

But the above is only one of a number of abuses specialty clubs are guilty of. The others are for more serious and injurious to the best interests of the fancy. We do not wish to be understood as being opposed to specialty clubs; on the contrary we advocate their existence as a very good thing for the standard bred poultry business, provided they are conducted on proper lines and do not become mere clubs for the personal and selfish ambitions of a chosen few, who like to run things on the frenzied-finance - standard - oil - beef-trust-total-extinction-basis plan.

There have been some very good specialty clubs in the past, and there are some today. The good work of the Cochin, N. E. Light Brahma, American Exhibition Game, Indian Game, National Wyandotte, and Dorking clubs of the dim past is not forgotten. Although these clubs are not as prominently before the public as in the past they still count among their members many loyal fanciers who had no selfish motives to bring the club into disrepute.

Of the more modern and popular clubs the Buff Leghorn is entitled to much praise. It has accomplished much good to the breed by sending out excellent articles to the poultry press, devoted to it. It certainly did not infringe on the rights of the publisher or presume on his good nature. The American Leghorn Club always did good work without working the catalogue racket to death, and there are a few others.

What is most unjust to close observers is the organized cliques that control the appointment of specialty judges at club shows. Ask any secretary of a prominent show if this is not one of the hardest problems he has to contend with in selecting his judges. If he wants the club show he must accept the club judge. More bitter feeling has been created by such arbitrary methods than can be told in print within the confines of a single page of this paper.

It is the same way with distributing the money collected from members to be offered as specials. There is too often a disposition on the part of some officer to work these specials in to the best advantage for himself.

Considerable printed criticism has been in the English poultry papers in the past year regarding specialty clubs. While the abuses over on the other side may be much greater than they are here, it is just as well to keep a sharp outlook and stop the growth of further encroachments of the specialty clubs on the fair field of the American poultry fancy.

BROWN'S BUDGET

Feed the male bird in the breeding season at night, by himself, if he does not have a good supply in his crop.

Aim to let the breeders have a run where they can get a chance to pick at the growing grass. If only for an hour near sundown, it will be found greatly beneficial.

Fowls will do little or no damage to the garden if they can have access to growing grass late in the afternoon. There is no danger of scratching just after a rain. They enjoy a run on the grass just before roosting time, and will be busily employed until it is real dark.

A man will never become too old to learn lessons in poultry culture. The men who know it all are those who have been in the business about one year.

Now comes the care of the little chicks. System in their feeding should be the order. It is best to have, if possible, one person to do the feeding. Where there are two or three expected to do the feeding, the food will not be provided as regularly, nor will it be as intelligently varied as when one person does it.

It is always important to have a supply of fresh water for the fowls kept in strictly clean vessels. They should be scalded out at least once a week. Keep the water in a shady place, and have a regular place for it, so the fowls will know where to go when they are thirsty.

When the yards become bare and no green pasture is available, no matter how large the yard may be, the hens will be apt to get into bad habits, such as feather pulling or comb picking, unless they are in some way employed.

An excellent plan is to spade up a good sized space, first scattering oats and rye. The covered grain will give the fowls a chance to scratch and hunt for food. The grains they do not get will sprout and furnish just such food as they need and greatly enjoy.

Whenever I do any plowing, harrowing or cultivating, some flock has an outing picnic. They will follow a fresh turned furrow clear around a big field. They are getting a regular banquet, and at the same time ridding the land of many troublesome pests. The white grubs they destroy on sod land will greatly lessen the destruction of crops for which these pest bugs are noted. Hens pay in many ways if you will give them a chance.

Parcels Post is growing in favor all through the land. The express companies' influence can not keep the clamor down. Some of us will live to see the day when a poultryman can send a setting of eggs by United States mail. The rural route business is the entering wedge. The combined efforts of the poultrymen could soon accomplish the establishment by the government of the Parcels Post.

One thing certain, the eggs could not be handled in a more rough manner than they are by express, and the companies charge enormous prices for their rough handling.

What a vast improvement there has been in the poultry press in the last five years. Lots of useful, practical information and interesting news has taken the place of the prosy hash and rehash of old books. There are plenty of intelligent, practical writers on poultry. Some of the poultry publications give reading line puffs at so much a line. It's too much on the patent medicine order. There is still occasional writers who spoil good articles by working in a mention of their stock.

Brother Orr, of Pennsylvania, must remember he is himself a judge who occasionally does general work—a whole show. Draw it mild, Tom, and remember judges are born, not made to order. It might be claimed that a man who is a specialist never gets beyond the one breed. The true artist can find plenty of beauty in all kinds of nature. A good, unprejudiced poultry judge recognizes at a glance the typical characteristics of the various breeds. He naturally makes such things a study.

What a delightful fellowship there is among true fanciers. One may visit a State and call on poultrymen he never has met, yet he will receive a welcome as sincere as that of an old friend. There is more than a mere bond of good fellowship. There seems to be a sort of intuitive understanding that they are both, or all, working in harmony for the promotion of a good cause.

A man doesn't lower his voice and look around suspiciously now when he acknowledges in public that he is in the chicken business. Times have changed. Poultry culture is not looked upon as "small business" as it used to be. The quality of products has so greatly improved that they compete with the choicest productions of the table. It is a business now in every sense of the word.

Some one has said there is no use for a "100 hen man" to try to run a poultry plant of the thousand caliber. Still it would seem that the man who can secure a profit from 100 fowls should be able to do still better with ten times the number. Perhaps he is like the farmer who works 80 acres and gets no greater yield than he would on 40 acres. He would have half as much to do in cultivating, etc., and the quality of crops would be superior. So it is with the poultryman who may try to spread out big, and "lessen up" on intensive methods—the little detail factors—that count so much towards success.

Food For Growing Chicks.

An article published a short time ago states that the growing chicks, or the young chicks, are better if not offered any food until forty-eight hours old. If no food is given them until seventy-two hours old it will be better for the chicks. The seventy-two hour theory was first brought to notice by Mr. Shackelton. But few who have tried it agree with Mr. Shackelton. The greater portion of the most successful poultry growers in the land believe that the proper way is to offer food to the young chicks as soon as they are twenty-four hours old, and let them decide when they will eat, always giving them their first meal of soft food, such as bread crumbs or something similar.

ODDS & ENDS

We are pleased to announce that all indictments hanging over Mr. C. L. Blanton have been dismissed. The U. S. District Attorney of Missouri could not produce a single witness, and he will be reinstated in his old position of Chief of Division, Architect's Office, Treasury Department. Mr. Blanton is a fancier from every standpoint, and is deeper than ever in love with his birds.

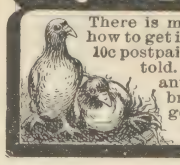
Mr. George L. Young, of No. 349 11th Street, Brooklyn, N. Y., has been elected Secretary of the National Bantam Association. Mr. Young is quite a fancier, very fond of Bantams, and hopes to be able to do a lot of good work for the improvement of the little miniature fowl.

Mr. R. L. Simmons, the secretary of the Piedmont Poultry Association of Lexington, N. C., has located on a fine ranch of tweny acres at Carthage, N. C., and will dip deeply into the poultry fountain in the future. We wish him success.

Mr. E. J. Watson, of South Carolina, writes that he is more than interested in the upbuilding of the poultry interests in the South. We extend a welcoming hand in this direction. In our opinion much good must come from growing poultry throughout the entire South as it should be done.

From Wisconsin comes the word of the formation of a new Bantam Association. This is a move in the right direction. They have a lot of fine bantams and good fanciers in the West, and the improvement of this stock can best be fostered through the united efforts of the fancy.

"Let us congratulate you," writes White's Class Advertising Co., "on the splendid prospects of making two great poultry papers in Washington. We shall watch with interest your progress and shall be glad to co-operate."



The best interests of the entire South demand the renewal of fencing, return to stock growing and the keeping of poultry under improved methods. This will enrich both the soil and the owner, and improvements along these lines will advance domestic conditions.

Nothing could have been more beautiful and attractive than the catalogue recently sent out by the Cyphers Incubator Company, at Buffalo. This is a crowning effort in the presentation of things valuable to the growers of poultry. The price of this new catalogue is ten cents, and no one should be without it. It is a valuable edition as a reference book, and the pleasure of seeing the pictures of so many poultrymen of standing cannot be had in any other way for so small an outlay.

All should join hands to push the Cochin back into prominence. This can best be done with the pen, and there is no place better than the columns of The Fancier for the purpose. Send in good, sensible articles about Cochins, and we will do our part to push them along. They were he first and best of the Asiatic family. Start the ball rolling.

If you are to set pullet eggs select the largest. Pullets eggs vary greatly in size, and by using the largest eggs you will get better chicks and build up egg size in your flock. I prefer to wait until a pullet has laid at least half a dozen eggs before I save any. When they begin to get a little larger in size is the time to save for incubation.

THE FANCY

The Fulton County Poultry and Pet Stock Club held a meeting at Johnstown, N. Y., March 13, to complete arrangements for a great show to be held in Gloversville, N. Y., November 20 to 25, 1905. As Fulton County is a hot bed of fanciers, and some of the best birds in America bred there, the importance of an exhibition is obvious. The last show held in Gloversville was in 1890, when A. E. Blunck and F. B. Zimmer were the leading lights in the county. We attended that show and it was a fine one, both in poultry and kennel exhibits. The arrangements and plans for the 1905 function are superior to anything ever attempted in the Glove City. The new and spacious Odd Fellow's Hall has been secured and a contract for the cooping and feeding made with the Empire Cooping Company. The superintendent of the show is Eugene Patterson, with Joseph L. Shull and Charles H. Hildreth as first and second assistants. The judges selected are: W. J. Stanton, F. B. Zimmer, and J. H. Drevenstedt.

The Fresno Poultry, Pigeon, and Pet Stock Association has come to life again and elected a new set of officers and determined to hold another show this fall. They have had no show for the past two years, but are going in now with renewed vigor, and intend to hold the biggest show and the best show that they have held yet. The dates, December 13 to 16, inclusive, have been selected, which follows the Alameda Show by a few days, and which will enable all fanciers who exhibit at the Alameda Show to stop their birds en route south and thus make a circuit of the coast shows. This show will be judged by comparison, and will be the first show so judged that has been held by this association, and a corps of competent judges will be selcted as soon as they can be communicated with and terms arranged.

At the last regular meeting of The National S. C. W. Leghorn Club, held in officers were elected: President E. G. Wyckoff; secretary and treasurer, Irving F. Rice, Courtland, N. Y. The secretary's report showed the club to be in a flourishing condition, its membership having more than doubled the past year. The club voted to give more valuable specials at more shows this coming year, and also to issue a club catalogue.

The Springfield Poultry and Pet Stock Association have chosen December 4-9 for their third annual score-card poultry show. City Hall, where the show has been held in the past, was burned in January, but a hall on Main Street has been secured, which is lighter and better in every way. The following judges have been selected, most of whom have judged here before: M. F. Delano, I. K. Felch, C. A. Ballou, W. H. Card, J. F. Watson, D. P. Shove, H. B. May, A. F. Pierce

The Tacoma Poultry Association will hold its 13th Annual Show, December 27, 1905, to January 1, 1906. Elmer Dixon and Harry H. Collier, judges. Mrs. C. A. Pratt, Secretary, 3203 South Seventh St., Tacoma, Wash.

In some localities Cochins are kept for producing fresh-laid eggs in winter. These are bred for egg producing and not for exhibition, and are close feathered and but slightly feathered on shanks and toes. All fowls must be guided into the line of work demanded.

At the annual meeting of the Essex County Bantam Club, held March 9, at Orange, N. J., the following officers were elected: President, J. Scorocroft; vice-president, F. Peters; Secretary, E. Johnson, Orange, N. J.; treasurer, A. Reinhardt. The annual report of the treasurer showed a good increase in the finances. The members expect to own their own cages and hold a bantam show next fall.

The Leominster Poultry Association at their annual meeting March 7, 1905, voted to hold another show December 5, 6, 7 and 8, 1905, and have engaged the following judges: D. P. Shove, A. C. Hawkins, J. H. Woodward and W. H. Card. The following officers were elected: President, A. A. Tisdale; vice-presidents, Haldie Nicholson, M. H. Bosworth, Henry Shaw, J. A. Ashline, F. A. Wood; secretary, Leon D. Mudgett; assistant secretary, G. E. Adams, and treasurer, L. H. Brown.

Mr. A. J. Kreutter, secretary of the Water Fowl Club of America, writes us that it is the intention of the club to give specials at several of the coming winter shows, and he is quite anxious that all who are interested in the water fowl should send in a membership fee of one dollar and help the good cause along.

Traveling Poultry Show.

The Canadian Department of Agriculture takes the advance position in educational display by sending about a car of live stock, including poultry, for the inspection of interested people. Those who desire to do so have the privilege of bringing their own best specimens for comparison with those in the exhibit. The people are also allowed the practice of selecting the best of each kind in the display.

In an egg test of ducks in Australia one pen of ducks is reported to have produced an average of 164 eggs each in ten months. Not many of the varieties of hens have done much better. A hen evidently is a machine which does her best work under the best management.

Volume XXIV. Washington, D. C., May 6, 1905. No. 607.

ORPINGTONS

As this breed is becoming so poular in in this country with everyone talking about them, a few of the leading features regarding them may be interesting to the readers of The American Fancier.

The Orpington family is a large one, there being ten varieties—the Black, White, Buff, Diamond Jubilee and Spangled Orpington,—each variety having single and rose combs, the former being more popular, as they grow larger. The first and original Orpington was the Black, introduced to the public in England in 1886 by the late William Cook, after eight years of crossing the Black Minorca, Black Langshan and Black Rock.

The White Orpingtons were produced in 1889, then the Buff Orpingtons in 1894, the Diamond Jubilees in 1897, and the Spangled Orpingtons in 1899. These dates are given, as a number of people in this country are laboring under a delusion, thinking that the Orpingtons are an entirely new breed. Many years ago they became the leading fowls of England and of all her colonies, and also of the continent. It is the feeling of all Orpington fanciers that the day is not far distant when the Orpington classes at the Madison Square and Herald Square Poultry Shows will be better filled than any other; they are already the third largest at both the above shows.

Why is the Orpington becoming so popular? is the frequently-asked question. Everyone in the world knows that Americans like the best of everything; they naturally like the best fowls, hence the popularity of the Orpington. A few of their leading qualities are first, and the most important: They are the greatest egg producers in the world, and will lay the majority of their eggs in the late autumn, winter and early spring months when eggs are expensive, one egg then being worth more than two laid in the summer. They are also superior to other breeds in weight, cocks having reached the enormous weight of 14½ pounds. This is, of course, exceptional, but many reach 12 pounds and over. They will grow and mature much earlier than other breeds, thereby making the best broilers, and will lay at five months old if well cared for. As for hardiness, they can not be beaten. The meat is very juicy and of very fine grain and is white in color. The prejudice against white-skinned fowls is practically a thing of the past, which it should be, as, of course, it makes no difference to the taste of the meat. The Orpington lays a brown egg, and plenty of them. A fowl with such good qualities cannot help becoming popular. Those who do not favor this breed think that they are being boomed by their breeders, but it is the fowls that are booming themselves. The proof of this is that when a pen of Orpingtons get into a village or town, it is not long before dozens of pens arrive.

The American Orpington Club is growing daily and other clubs have sprung up, the latest being the National Single Comb Buff Orpington Club, which is receiving great support from all fanciers of this variety.

Of course, the former club is the foremost Orpington club in this country, and will continue so, as it embodies all ten varieties.

At the Herald Square Show an interesting topic was discussed as to which was the best variety of the Orpingtons for utility purposes. Each person present gave their experiences with the different varieties they kept, and at the end of the meeting it was concluded that no one variety was better than another, and it was simply a matter of choice as to colors. A great feature of an Orpington is that it usually improves with age, getting better with every year; of course, this is regarding show points.

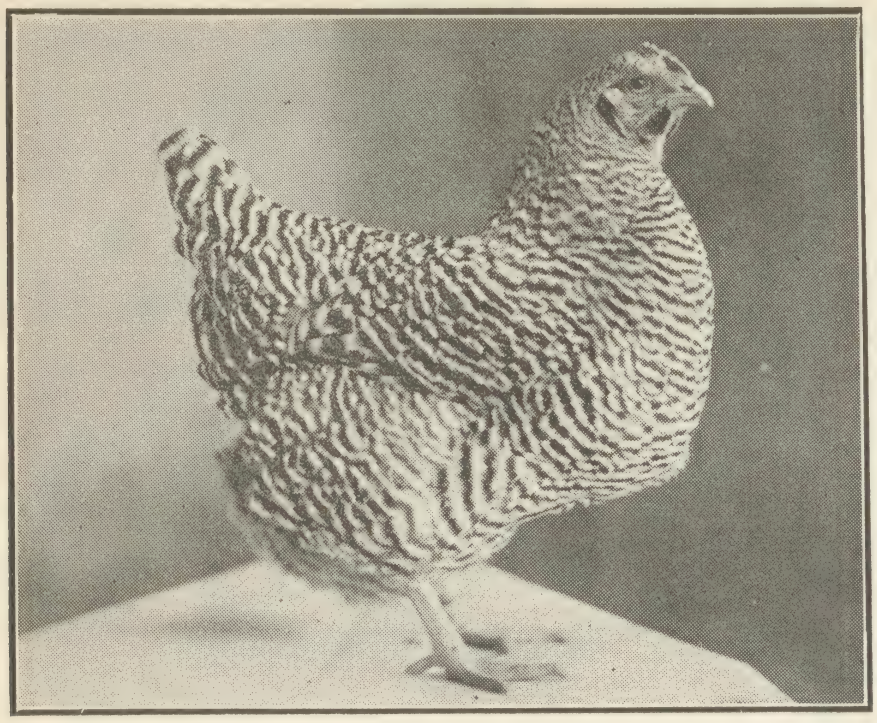
ORPINGTON COCK.

The Orpington is the only breed of fowls that has a special poultry paper run for its benefit, the Orpington Poultry Journal.

There is no doubt that if any one wants to make money out of fowls, the Orpington is the one that will give the best interest on money expended for them. One of the reasons for this is because the demand is so great, and most of the Orpington breeders very soon get sold out of stock.—P. S. Cook.

Decline of the Exhibition Game.

Is it possible through the medium of your journal to infuse some enthusiasm into the breeders of modern Games? What has become of the old-time exhibitors that used to make things hum at Madison Square? It looks as though the once autocrat of the show room has been relegated to the rear. When Blunck, Peirce, Glasgow, Barber and others were interested in the stately birds, there was some life and fun in the game. Compare the numerically pitiable exhibits of the past two or three years to what it previously was, and it is enough to sadden anyone who ever had any pleasure in breeding or viewing this splendid breed.



There is no doubt but that it is not all fun in breeding and preparing this class for competition, as there probably is more real effort demanded of breeders of modern games to produce the best than of any other variety. Any old woman can collect and successfully put into competition Rocks and "Dottes" as compared to the skill required of the Exhibition Game breeder. This, in itself, should be an incentive for a more strenuous determination on their part, as well as their beauty. If there is not more enthusiasm (and that soon) put into the Game and Game Bantam Club, the first word of the title must be eliminated. It positively points that way now, as the club decided at its last meeting to cut out the cup for Games.

Considerable feeling was displayed some few years back, over this trophy when imported birds were eligible, and a resolution was passed barring them. It was thought this would give a greater impetus to the home talent, but it appears to have failed in its mission. I do not for a moment wish it understood that we should again revert to that state because it would then simply mean a case of the biggest pocketbook. Why this interesting breed should, particularly at Madison Square, be so flattened I can't understand, particularly when reading the accounts of the Crystal Palace and Birmingham Shows, where at the latter the Games are the great attraction. Look at the monstrosities shown at the last Boston Show, totalling four, as representing the modern Game.

There certainly is "something rotten in the state of Denmark" with regard to the Game Club, as I understand the said club has been indebted to a single individual for its existence in the past, and when such is the case, it were better the Game Club expires. The Bantams are well able to look after themselves, numerically and financially, and it is not just to expect the Bantam breeders to shoulder the deficiencies of the Game men. Names enough appear on the books to successfully maintain the prestige of the Game Club, if they would. Perhaps it would not so much surprise members as outsiders to know the actual financial position of the club, when I state last year's specials have not been fully paid or were not until very recently. Here is a question that should be seriously considered by members and if it is their wish to disband let them so indicate, or preferably induce more breeders to join and make the Club what it should be, the premier. Certainly there ought to be breeders and enthusiasts enough to keep the thing alive and awake, without the undignified and demoralizing action of depending on the liberality of one or two gentlemen for its sustenance. Let us all put a shoulder to the wheel, and lift the club out of the quagmire into which it has sunk, or forget there is such a noble breed of fowl as the modern Game. I admit that climatic influences greatly affect the chances of the Game here in the earlier stages, but some grand birds have been raised and shown. Why can't it be done again, and in such numbers as to make an attractive showing? To those already members of the club I trust I need not make another appeal. I am willing to do my part, and I sincerely hope our number may be considerably augmented by many more and enthusiastic breeders and admirers, for I believe the Game Club can yet be resuscitated and made more interesting and sportsmanlike. —W. H. Mudge.

New Nests.

When you notice a pullet looking around for a new nest, or trying to find a new place to lay, take the hint and supply a nest or two in odd places, and see how quickly the pullets, often several of them, will make the new nest their laying place.

BARRED PLYMOUTH ROCK HEN.
Owned and bred by Arthur G. Bouck.

Silver Penciled Plymouth Rocks.

"Regarding the fact that Silver Penciled Plymouth Rocks are therein claimed 'to have not a drop of Plymouth Rock blood in them' and other matters relevant to the above, I would like to ask what 'Plymouth Rock blood' is? Or what anyhow is the use or sense of indiscriminately decrying new varieties? Or to pretend the time is here or will soon come to arbitrarily shut off new varieties? Or admitting seemingly the original Plymouth Rock mixture is the best yet, is that any guarantee that something far better will not spring up some day?

"If we admit that 'Plymouth Rock blood' is part Java then we should also admit the claim of certain early breeders of the Silver Plymouth Rock that they are part Java. This line of blood being claimed to be Mottled Java, Gray Dorking, Dark Brahma.

"After I had my first eggs and first stock I was solemnly told by poultrymen, in whom I placed confidence, that this variety was nothing but Silver Penciled Wyandotte blood. Anyhow, in September, 1904, I began a careful inquiry for single combs among Wyandotte breeders. By October they began to arrive and my opinion of them, as Silver Plymouth Rocks and their number, is best told by the fact that I returned all of them and paid out over twelve dollars in charges. They failed invariably in size and shape (Rock shape), usually in color of lobes and legs.

"If at the end of this season the Silver Plymouth Rocks should wish to apply for entrance, it could. I have three generations of birds which, as individuals, could display as much beauty to the eye, as good shape, size, color, value, etc., closely approaching any Plymouth Rock blood be it Barred, White or Buff. What I say in this last paragraph of Silver, so far as I have been able to see and judge, applies equally to the Partridge."—W. Theo. Wittman.

Faverolles.

I was pleased to read on the first page of your issue of April 15 a short item referring to Faverolles, as all matter relating to this really meritorious breed interests me. But your calling them new may mislead some readers not familiar with them or their history. While they are comparatively a new breed in this country, they have been conspicuous figures in the poultry fancy of England for some ten years or more. From their first importation from the north of France they rapidly gained in popularity, a club was formed in their interest, and today they are bred by hundreds of English fanciers.

I had read commendations of the breed in English poultry publications, and had imported several settings of eggs with unsatisfactory results. The first time I saw them advertised in this country was by a gentleman in Columbiana, Ohio, whose name I do not recall. I purchased from him a cock and three hens. A short experience with these induced a desire for more knowledge of the breed, and I imported from two women advertisers in England two lots of what were announced to be Salmon Faverolles. I never bred from either lot. I placed myself in correspondence with prominent members of the Faverolle Club of England, and began to gather valuable information regarding the breed and a flock of fowls that was the foundation of my present breeding stock.

In the winter of 1903-1904 the Madison Square Show officers declined to be more liberal with Faverolles than to place them in the O. V. class. Last winter they had classes at Madison Square, at Boston and at Herald Square, which were well filled, considering the limited knowledge of the breed in this country. It is evident from the large number of settings of eggs being sold this season that the coming winter shows will be favored with liberal classes of this valuable and growing breed. I hope to see a Faverolle Club of America formed and a position secured for the breed in the American Standard.

Dr. A. H. Phelps has doubtless imported more Faverolles than all other breeders in the country, and he has done much to bring their good qualities to the attention of American poultrymen.—J. H. Symonds.

The "I told you so" people now have the floor.

"A true fancier can not refrain from complimenting the forward movement for the better in our poultry publications," writes Mr. Wyckoff.

Brown's Budget

A "personally conducted trip" successful poultry raising has to be. The conductor must be very familiar with the route, know all the dangerous places on the line, and attend strictly to business. There is no let up, the hand must be kept on the throttle, and every danger signal seriously considered.

What many consider trouble, or as people often term it, "unnecessary trouble," is made up of the very important factors that fit in the cog wheel of success. "Success" in any occupation comes only after repeated efforts. "Struggles" may more properly express it. Failures are often serious and very discouraging lessons, but they teach us important facts.

Near me resides a friend who recently moved out from the city. He never had any experience with poultry, but was sensible enough to get ideas from poultry papers. He built good chicken houses, provided scratching sheds, and kept everything neat and clean. His neighbors did not believe in pure breeds, incubators or brooders, and indulged in considerable scoffing and ridicule. One neighbor in particular told him it was no use to buy high-priced feed, or have scratching sheds and the like. My friend keeps White Wyandottes and Barred Rocks. This spring the officious neighbor grew more inquisitive, and one afternoon he was observed peeping through the fence, and was invited over to see the chickens and the interior of the houses. He expressed his surprise at the foolishness of cleaning the houses every day and the "idea" of having such nice nest boxes under a "foolish" dropping board "was senseless." "Didn't help egg laying a bit." "How many eggs are you getting a day." "Well," was the reply, "considerably over ninety per cent on the average, and sometimes one hundred per cent." An incredulous smile was discernable on the features of the unconverted neighbor. "Well, let us gather the eggs laid to day and see what it is." Nine in one nest, seven in another, and five in another, total, 21. As there were twenty-one hens, it was a hundred per cent day. Pretty good for the Rocks. The Wyandottes had that day scored a ninety-nine per cent egg record. "What!" said the neighbor, "it is hard to believe it, but you have given me the evidence. Why twenty-one eggs are more than I get a day from my one hundred and seventeen hens." Soon the man was seen in his back yard wildly gesticulating to his better half. Shortly after, they both went to the woods with rake and bag for leaves. Since then he actually offered to trade a setting of his mongrel eggs for some eggs of the pure breeds. A genuine conversion that will in time open the man's heart and purse a little.

A "fighting rooster" makes a good bird to head a breeding pen. He has got some vim. It's just awful though, to have 'em banging away and disfiguring each other—those you have for sale. So many "unconverted" people are afraid to buy a "rooster" that shows a little mutilation in comb or wattles. Then it is always the best-looking bird that gets damaged the most.

The "early spring" has had a serious relapse which in this region has developed into Marchania. The chicks can't find the early worm, and even the sunshine has cold winds on both sides of it.

White plumage rather denotes "constitutional vigor," if we consider the fact that a majority of the most hardy animals and birds of the polar regions are white. It is in the opinion of the writer a fact that all white breeds that have rich yellow (orange) legs must necessarily show a tinge of "off" color in the down or quills. Chalky white birds are invariably "off" color in beak and legs. Nature demands the cream under color in yellow skinned white breeds. Dorkings, White Langshans and other kindred white breeds are more easily bred chalky white, because of their lack of yellow skin and legs.

Mr. Billups wants to know why fancy poultrymen have to trap their hens to make them lay. He says he paid 35 cents for eight Guinea hen eggs and put them with five hen eggs under a hen, and all the hens' eggs hatched, but none of the Guinea eggs. Says the man that sold him "them a'r Guinea eggs is a swindler.' Next day a poultry man told him something about the time of incubation of Guinea eggs. Now he gets mad if you say "go to Guinea" to him.

Factions in the poultry arena means friction that hurts both sides. History should be slowly made. A mushroom growth is always too spongy and lacks the proper solidity for lasting qualities. Quality is always better than quantity.

This double vs. single mating is a very interesting subject which has many important points for argument on both sides. Perhaps the making of the standard is purposely done to render double mating necessary. The skill and knowledge of "how to do it" makes the fine specimens of particolored breeds valuable. One argues that if a pen sold at the shows would produce equally fine birds, good specimens would soon command a very small price. Another contends that thousands of purchasers have bought double mating pen results at shows and become so disgusted with the progeny that they left the fancy forever. There is less profit, and a thousand times more trouble with double mating. The "culls" make it necessary to sell in a "commercial" way. But this same commercial side, brings in paying returns for eggs and dressed poultry. No sensible poultryman should sell his culls alive to any one.

No matter what process is followed in feeding poultry, or what method is adopted in keeping fowls, or what breed is kept, common sense must be the leading factor. Conditions, surroundings, and even the flocks, are so varied that no set rules can be given that would be best for all places or flocks. The man who makes a study of poultry keeping learns the requirements of his flocks, and his common sense judgment will find plenty of opportunity to be exercised.

Parcels post will eventually come in this country, and probably the time is not far away. Sending eggs by mail at first will seem queer, but radical departures of any kind at first are more than novel.

Trap Nest Trials and Farm Experiences.

February showed an increase in laying over the month of January, the total number of eggs gathered from our experimental pens being 636, against 462 for the previous month. Considering the weather, we had during February (all thanks to the pesky ground hog!), and noting the fact that the fowls were compelled to remain indoors more days than they were allowed out, the increase is a creditable one.

We did not make our object quite clear in our former article on this subject. We are not trying to find out how many eggs these hens and pullets will lay from January 1st to the end of December of this year, but rather how many eggs they will lay during the winter, spring and the coming fall. In other words, those laying in January—if they keep up a reasonable gait during the following four months—will be chosen to breed up for next winter's layers. We will run the traps to the first of June. During that month and also July and August, we will open up the nests, keeping no account of their individual records, merely noting progress, etc., made by pens. September 1 the traps will again be operated to pick out the early laying pullets, as well as to note the laying of individual hens during the molting period. Besides, we want to settle a number of disputed opinions as to time occupied in broodiness and raising a family of chicks, time gained in breaking up broody hens, time taken for molting, and many more matters which will be more or less valuable to the practical poultryer.

Where the great value in the use of trap nests comes in, is the guarantee of knowing our winter layers, and by setting the eggs from our January layers we gradually build up a winter-laying strain.

The daily record, per pens, was as follows for the month of February:

Feb.	Pen 4	Pen 5	Pen 6	Pen 7	Pen 8	Pen 9	Pen 10	Pen 11	Total.
1	1	2	6		2	4	2	1	18

28	4	2	4	2	4	7	2	3	28

The above table shows that the highest number of eggs gathered in one day was 34, and the lowest number 13. The figures in January were 25 and 6, respectively. Pen No. 6, which laid the most eggs during January (reaching 149), droppd to 128 for February, and Pen No. 9 took the lead in number of eggs for the month, laying 134. This is the only pen in which all fifteen hens laid during the month.

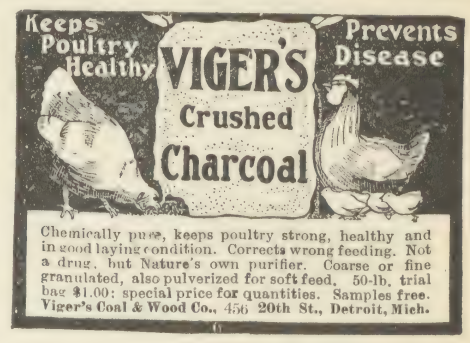
No. 4.....	10	5	9.1 eggs
No. 5.....	12	3	9 5
No. 6.....	13	2	9.11
No. 7.....	10	5	6 2
No. 8.....	8	7	5.6
No. 9.....	15	0	8.14
No. 10.....	4	6	9.
No. 11.....	2	8	13.2
Total....	74	36

This gives Pen No. 11, with only two laying Brahma pullets, the highest pen record, and Pen No. 8, with eight laying pullets, the lowest. The highest number of eggs gathered in one day from a single pen was 8, taken from Pen No. 6, February 11. During the month we found 12 eggs outside the trap nests in Pen No. 4; seven in Pen No. 5; five in Pen No. 6; one in Pen No. 7; six in Pen No. 8; eighteen in Pen No. 9; none in Pen No. 10, and five in Pen No. 11. The record further shows a gain of twenty layers during the month of February.

In giving the January report of laying, the printer omitted the individual records, which are important in showing the individual advance made by this promiscuous lot of hens. During that month, Wyandotte pullet No. 76 laid twenty eggs; Brahma hens Nos. 78 and 85 laid seventeen eggs each; No. 17 Wyandotte hen, and No. 38, Wyandotte pullet, laid sixteen eggs each. The rest of the flocks varied their laying from twelve eggs down to one each for the month.

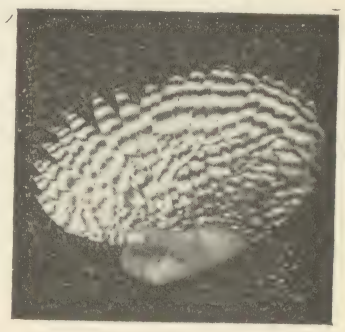
For February, Brahma hen No. 85 laid the highest number of eggs, giving nineteen, which, added to the seventeen she laid in January, makes a total of thirty-six for the two months. No. 76, Wyandotte pullet, which was in the lead for January, laid only seventen eggs in February (twenty in January), which places her in the lead by one, for the two months total, she reaching thirty-seven. No. 17, Wyandotte hen, laid sixteen eggs, same number as she did the previous month, which gives her a total of thirty-two eggs. Wyandotte pullet No. 38 laid fifteen eggs, making a total of thirty-one. No. 17 hen performed the feat of laying two eggs in one day. On the morning of the 27th day of the month she laid a regular sized egg, and then later in the day we again caught her in the trap nest with a pigeon sized egg. Hens Nos. 2, 3, and 8, in Pen No. 4, did not lay an egg during February, being in a very fat condition. In Pen No. 5, hen No. 22 did not lay during the month, and also pullet No. 44, in Pen No. 6.

NOTES.



It is wonderful how quickly the use of trap nests will tame hens. At first they are almost "scared to death" when the nest is opened and you try to catch them, but gradually they become used to it, and some will actually stand still waiting for you to pick them up.

Whenever we catch a hen in a trap, we carefully note her condition. We look at her general appearance—her eyes, nostrils and color of her comb. We also carefully examine her legs, and if we see the least suspicion of scurvy, we remove her to one of our cages (referred to in the March issue of The Feather.) and give her a week's treatment, more or less, according to the condition of her legs, of an ointment we make by working all the sulphur we can in vaseline until it becomes a thick paste. We always keep this ointment on hand so as to be ready when needed. It might be well to remember that in order to make any treatment for scaly legs all the more effective, the legs should first be washed with warm water and castile soap.



On the farm of the writer a specialty is made in supplying table eggs, and quite a number of these are disposed to residents of Philadelphia. The trade in that city could be greatly increased, but the capacity of the farm will not warrant it. These eggs have become famous with these city people on account of their freshness and fine flavor. Some enthusiasts imagine that some special preparation was given the fowls to impart that rich flavor, and others wanted some of the stock. One who wanted to know the breed of hens that laid the eggs was surprised to learn that they were White Wyandottes. He said he kept that variety for years but they never laid eggs like the ones we furnished.

There is no secret about it. These birds are all yarded in generous sized yards, their quarters are kept strictly clean, and they are fed only pure, clean food—such as we explained in the March 25th issue of The Fancier. Cleanliness and purity are important factors in the poultry yard, and where they are rigidly enforced there will be no trouble to secure good flavored eggs, no matter what breed is kept.

Editorial Gossip.

The poultry business is being thoroughly discussed by farmers' clubs in many localities. There seems to be additional efforts made to get away from ornamentation, in favor of well-formed and producing hens.

Near New York city a poultryman is attempting to grow Pekin Ducks, and reports that from six hundred duck eggs, placed in two incubators, he has only eight living ducklings. The majority of the eggs had living young in them on the twenty-first day. The State Agricultural Departments might well investigate and find out the cause of such troubles.

The poultry growers of Florida are moving for State aid to assist in the cultivation of the egg crop.

About three hundred million dollars of outside capital has gone into southern property in the last twelve months.

A Western poultry grower is up in arms against the English sparrow, one pair of which he states will rear five broods each season, a total of over twenty to each pair. With each brood they breed a million mites which they scatter into hen coops, brooders, chicken houses and pigeon lofts. If this be true all poultry men should join in a war to exterminate them.

Plenty of lice paint or kerosene applied to all exposed places will destroy the lice.

Exercise improves the health of the fowls and the fertility of the eggs.

A gradual drifting back to the Pit Game fowl for utility purposes is observed. These, like the thoroughbred horse, are a combination of all things desirable of their kind. If it were not so difficult to control their ambitious tendencies, the game fowl would be most popular for family market poultry and egg producers.

Mr. Harry H. Collier has been selected by the Lewis and Clark Fair Commission to gather in the poultry exhibit for the World's Fair at Portland, Oregon, October 5 to 12, 1905. Mr. Collier is associate editor of the Pacific Poultryman, of Tacoma, which states in its issue of April 15, that The American Fancier improves with age. Right you are, and we hope to improve faster than ever before. Send the Fair news about poultry so we can tell it to the world.

The interest in Sebright Bantams has been strongly revived in England. Dr. Cunningham has written considerable about them of late in the English poultry press. His writings are so fully illustrated by photographic engravings as to make them most interesting. We hope to have some writings on these beautiful pets in the June issue of The Feather.

England has a four-legged pullet that has laid quite a clutch of eggs. Her constant companion is a kitten. The photo of the pullet shows four well-developed shanks and feet.

In looking over the exchanges to hand we do not find one that takes exception to the final outcome of the Pittsburg meeting. From east to west and north to south the sentiment favors the final action. The editor of a Western paper states that prior to the Pittsburg meeting he thought that the old association was gone, but now he doubts the possibility of killing it with a club. Join with us, Brother Richards, for true business reform, and we can have it with a big R.

May came to us this time to find that the rear guard of winter contended for supremacy in many localities. This has been the most backward spring that any of the older land-marks can recall, yet the report of good results with young stock comes from all sides. In England the hatching of all but Bantams is complete, and we here, north of the Mason and Dixon line, just begin to see the tulips bloom and the trees blossom, and so few chicks with the mother hen as to be scarcely noticeable.

Yet the final outcome of the season will be Nature's plentiful supply.

We may find fault and neglect our opportunities, but nature will not.

The general increased activity in poultry affairs is loudly sounded in the number of letters that ask for advice about "starting in the poultry business." More inquiries of this kind come now in a month than came formerly in a year. The greater part of those that now come are seeking this line as a business investment, for helping some one of the family to make a living from eggs and market poultry. The increase of the commercial side of poultry culture is largely in advance of previous years. This to a large extent accounts for the very heavy demand for standard bred poultry and eggs for hatching at the present time.

The demand for high-class stock and eggs for hatching is so large that those who grow them for sale are unable to fill the orders. Higher prices than ever before are asked and received. Straws show the way the wind blows and these conditions should eliminate any doubt of a possible chance for a decline in the demand for years to come. These conditions are present with those who make a specialty of breeding the best. Those who have the reputation for furnishing the best, and only the best, have been overwhelmed with orders at their own prices. We know of purchasers who have sent orders to our patrons, who have paid the highest prices, to be served as their turn came in rotation with others.

This is true of all classes, poultry, pigeons, turkeys, water fowl, and eggs for hatching from these, where the quality of stock desired is offered, have found ready purchasers. The main desideratum is guaranteed quality, and as often pointed out, quality is the main feature sought, price being of minor consideration. In this, as in every other line of trade, those who have the best quality may set their own value on what they have to sell, and get it. Quality governs both demand and price

Retain the best and dispose of the balance for market poultry.

Never send poor quality stock, nor their eggs to a customer; eggs at twenty-five cents or more each should be golden.

The purchaser should have first consideration at the hands of the seller. Never be tempted to send anything inferior to him. The shell of the egg is very thin, but thin as it is, it holds your honor as a dealer. If of good quality it will add to your reputation; if otherwise, it may prove of future injury to your trade, but above all this, the honor of the standard-bred poultry business rests with the seller. Guard this as you would your life and both sides will succeed.

Those who pay good prices for stock or eggs have the right to expect even better than is promised them. If selling to the amateur his first purchase, be more than particular to send him the best. Do not let any act of yours discourage the beginner. See to it that these of all others have more than fair treatment at your hand, for by so doing you add a valiant soldier to the guard of poultry growers. A satisfied purchaser becomes a true fancier, a disappointed one turns away disgusted.

Don't look for thirteen prize winners from each setting of eggs; that is an impossibility.

The purchaser has a right to expect a reasonable good hatch, of true bred chicks, from every purchase of eggs for hatching.

When the chicks are hatched their future rests almost entirely in the hands of those who feed and care for them. If properly cared for, you have the right to expect true quality of stock of a grade fully equal to the value of the eggs, but, if carelessly handled, no matter how good the parent stock may be, the result will be unsatisfactory. In the April issue of The Feather we told our readers how to grow the young chicks; you must follow the general outline given there, if you hope for success in growing exhibition fowls from good eggs. If neglectful of important elements do not blame those who sell you the eggs, if you do not have successful results.

From now on the growing chicks must have unceasing attention. They must be regularly, properly and thoroughly fed, watered and housed. Exhibition fowls will not rear themselves. Constant attention to their needs is the only way to gain success.

The more attention given to the growing stock, the more valuable will they be as exhibition specimens. Those that won the prizes last winter and that sold for high prices, were the result of patience, care and a perfect system of feeding. "Well fed is half groomed" they say of the horse. Well grown is half the battle in the show room. Poorly grown specimens will never win in strong competition, and if poorly grown blame yourself, not the eggs from which they were hatched. If of poor quality then you have the right to find fault with the eggs.

Take hold of the proposition as a business venture, with the full knowledge that success can only come as the result of proper management. Things that are left to manage themselves usually run to seed. Young chicks need fully as much care and attention to bring them to show room quality as the business house requires to show a profit. Customers continue to trade with a firm as the result of good treatment. This same rule will apply to the seller of poultry or eggs. Success comes in business as the reward for proper management.

We are indebted to Dr. J. S. Wolfe, Bloomfield, N. J., for two photographs of Silver Spangled Hamburgs. They represent "Silver King," first cock, Madison Square Garden, N. Y., in 1903 and 1905, and at Newark, 1904; "Columbia," first pullet, Atlantic City, Trenton and Newark, 1902, and second, Madison Square Garden, 1903. The latter was never shown as a hen except in a pen that won first at Newark, 1905. These photographs are the best we have ever seen of a Hamburg, and were used as models by the eminent artist, Franklane L. Sewell. Having handled the birds on several occasions we can vouch for the correctness of the pictures and hope to illustrate them shortly in The American Fancier.

The Charleston Poultry Association, a chartered organization with a capital stock of $2,000, began life on the fifteenth day of April, 1905. The following officers were elected: President, J. M. Connelley; vice-presidents, Dr. Benjamin McInnes and J. T. Snelson; treasurer, W. K. McDowell; secretary, J. T. McCarty; assistant secretary, J. M. Petit. This organization is the result of a successful show held in Charleston, S. C., during November of last year. The aim of the stockholders is to make it the banner show of the South. The first Wednesday in December has been selected as a permanent date on which to hold annual exhibitions. The dates this year are December 6 to 13. This excellent club deserves unmeasured success, being composed of thoroughbred fanciers located in one of the great and historic cities of the South. Members of the American Poultry Association who attended the last annual meeting of the latter, held at Charleston, will never forget the hospitality of the Southern fanciers located there.

We learn that a show will be held at Greenville, S. C., next winter. The last one held there was many years ago, but it was a very enjoyable affair, quite a number of Northern fanciers attending it.

The continuous performance of incessant and indiscreet puffing by itinerant poultry scribes of poultry yards, the proprietors of which are advertisers in the journals in which these creamy puffs appear, is doing more harm than good. It drops the solid element in the shade, and too frequently brings in the lime-light some of the doubtful propositions in the poultry business. Reading notices of this kind are dangerous things, even in this age of trade poultry journalism. Publishers of reputable papers will sooner or later be compelled to put a stop to such practices, if they desire to retain the confidence of their readers.

All Hamburg breeders should join the Hamburg Fanciers Club organized two years ago. Mr. Robert Treat Pain, Jr., 45 State Street, Boston, Mass., is the secretary. Hamburgs are too beautiful and too valuable as egg producers to be allowed to sink into "innocuous desuetude"

Mr. Frank Bantam Zimmer, the erstwhile bantam breeder and poultry judge, is so deep in the dog business that he has but little time for feathers. He has just completed another large kennel building and will have several hundred beagles this season that will hunt the cotton-tails "in the morning dew." But Judge Zimmer has a fine string of Silver Sebrights that will make their mark at future shows. They are descendants from a splendid pen imported two years ago from England. One of these birds was used as a model for the Standard sketch of Sebrights, by Sewell.

Secretaries of poultry shows will confer a great favor by sending their show dates as promptly as possible to J. H. Drevenstedt, Johnstown, N. Y., so they can be listed. We expect to publish the advance list in a few weeks in order to help societies that have not selected their dates to avoid possible clashing with other near-by functions.

Poultry judges should have a judge card in our classified column under that caption. It will help them in securing engagements as well as help secretaries in locating their whereabouts.

The vote for the next annual meeting of the American Poultry Association will be taken this month. New York, Cincinnati and Denver are the locations to be voted upon.

Will there be an incubator war? Rumor has it that one of the big guns in the incubator business some years ago will again enter the field and set a hot pace for the others to follow.

In a well-known contemporary, published in the boundless West, we read: "No one should inbreed—that is, use males that are related to females—as the results are always very poor in the long run, and will end in unhealthy stock." This is about as dangerous a fallacy as can be permitted to see printer's ink. It is not borne out by facts, and, if allowed to take hold in the minds of breeders, will result in a serious deterioration of the flocks. In-and-inbreeding, properly conducted, is the only method by which a race or strain of animals can be built up to a high standard of perfection. In the cattle kingdom, the Holderness breed is a striking example. Originated from a single male and female, they were bred up to a high state of usefulness and survived many generations. Indiscriminate mixing up of different strains results in chaos; careful selection of the blood relatives, avoiding the mating of brothers and sisters together, will produce the highest type approaching the desired ideal. And this kind of mating can go for many years without showing a trace of degeneration. In selecting all stock, nature's law—the survival of the fittest—is a very good one to follow, where any doubt exists as to the stamina and reproductive powers of the specimens under consideration.

Some good people imagine when they part with a goodly slice of Uncle Sam's money and get in return a lovely, well-bred pen of birds, that they are on the happy road to success in poultry culture. That's the way they feel when they get the birds, and possibly when they take care of them. The troubles begin when the chickens begin to hatch. The progeny of many a fine pen has been spoiled by lack of proper food, care and environments. When winter comes, often a scrubby, measly batch of chickens is the result and the chances are, the man who sold the original pen, comes in for a beautiful roasting. On the other hand we have seen ordinary birds, handled by expert and careful poultrymen, that produced remarkable results in the progeny. Raising fine birds is a business like all other vocations. It takes intelligence, time and labor to make it a success.

Out in wide-awake Denmark, where poultry-raising and butter-making is a Danish pride, it is looked upon as a safe rule for a profitable hen to lay eggs weighing 7¼ to the pound; a very good market standard. The average in this country is extremely variable and will approach nearer eight to the pound in many markets. In several decades back, eggs from Black Spanish fowls averaged seven to the pound, and found a fancy market in New York City. But there are not enough Black Spanish left in New York State to lay eggs enough for wedding cake. This good and ancient breed needs a little prodding up. It can produce the large, chalky hen fruit in a manner very acceptable to the epicure. Cross a Spanish with a White Leghorn, and note the results in the egg production. Size and quality will be equal to the Spanish.

The Black Sumatra game fowl is enjoying a new lease of life in old England, thanks to the efforts and hard work of Mr. T. R. Eaton, the secretary of the Black Sumatra Game Fowl Club. Mr. Eaton has kindly sent us the Standard and Club rules. It is to be hoped that breeders of Black Sumatras in this country will get together and do something to encourage the breeding of this handsomest of all black fowls. Our old friend, Dr. Nelson Wood, whose Sumatras were beauty brights about ten years ago, still has a few left, so we are informed, and, if he will kindly stir up the other Sumatra fanciers, we may hope for a larger entry at the leading shows in the future.

Many times knocked out but still in the ring, the old graylocked statement that pointed eggs will hatch cockerels and round eggs hatch pullets begins its annual circuit of the poultry and agricultural press. While we have seen evidence that gave a plausible substantitive of the above theory, we have also seen much more evidence to prove its utter worthlessness. The fact remains that the human eye and modern science have been unable to detect the sex of the unborn chicken, either by the outward appearance or other peculiar functions of the egg. As it is next to impossible to detect the sex of the chicken when first hatched, how much harder must it be to read the answer on the egg shell?

HENRY S. BALL.

ONE of the best known of all judges is the subject of this sketch, Mr. Henry S. Ball. He has been so long identified with poultry interests that it would not seem natural if he wasn't with us in some way or other. As a judge he has scored a great success, as a man he has scored a greater one, for he was the same genial and open-hearted fellow on all occasions. Our readers who have heard of him so often will be glad of the privilege of seeing his portrait as printed above.

This Indicates the wide-spread confidence the poultry public has in Cyphers Company's manufactures. We fully appreciate this and assure our thousands of friends and patrons that we shall continue to do all in our power to merit their trade and confidence.

Norwalk, Conn., Feb. 23, 1905.

Cyphers Incubator Co., Buffalo, N. Y. Gentlemen:—In response to your request that we allow you to photograph our incubator cellar, would say that we shall be only too glad to have you do so, as we feel proud of the fact that we have your incubators in place and all in perfect running order. As stated to you before, we now have 84 of your No. 3 Standard Cyphers incubators and they are giving perfect satisfaction. We are also glad to inform you that we have no cause for regret having requested you to replace the 12 "Model" incubators which we purchased last year, with 12 more of your Standard 1905 pattern incubators, which, in addition to the original order of 72, which I handed you last fall, makes as above stated, 84 machines, which is the full complement of our incubator cellar. In fact, we constructed it with the idea of placing therein 84 "Model" incubators. But after having operated them one season, decided that we could not afford to go back on the Old Original Standard Cyphers, which has stood me personally in such good stead while managing the Oxford Duck Farm, the Yardley Duck Farm and the Ledgewood Duck Farm where I have been located for the past year. I expect to market this year 50,000 ducklings.

Yours very truly. GEO. A. McFETRIDGE.

Now that the old hen is both incubator and brooder, the vernal outbreak in our practical poultry papers as to how to handle a setting hen and her brood is manifest. Columns are written as to how to build a nest, handle the biddies, what to feed them, when to sprinkle, and how to test the eggs and numerous other details too numerous to mention. When the chickens are once safely stowed under the clucking hen, provided there are chickens to be found after the string of details has been played, comes more profound advice. To the hardened old fancier much of this seems amusing and superfluous; to the struggling amateur it is timely and confusing at the same time.

All men do not agree as to what is the best method to be pursued with setting hens, and there is so much difference of opinion as to what constitutes the proper bill of fare for the brood that we do not expect to give infallible rules on these matters. We can indicate the line of treatment and trust the intelligence and common sense of our readers to apply it.

The nest can be made of most anything that will insure a fairly soft berth for the hen. As we usually set two hens at once, we prefer square boxes to hold two nests. Each nest is fifteen inches square. The bottom is made of one-half-inch wire netting, the sides, front and top, of one-half-inch box pine or basswood. The box is fifteen inches high, the front having a six-inch base board. The boxes are set on the ground in a dark shed and each nest is filled with either hay, straw, or leaves. We prefer marsh hay, but that is only a fancy, as eggs will hatch as well when other materials are used. We give the hens from ten to fourteen eggs, according to season, and the size of the eggs and hens. When we are positive that a hen wants to set, and no man or woman ever failed to detect that accomplishment, we place her on the eggs, provide plenty of corn and wheat and water, and except a twice daily inspection of the setting room, never molest a hen until she has hatched her brood. It may happen that some eggs will not pip until the twenty-second day, but this is rarely the case, and all chickens should be out at the end of the twenty-first day. With Game Bantams and Leghorns, it is well to watch the twentieth day, as they begin pipping on the nineteenth day. By setting two hens, all the chickens hatched out at the normal period can be given to one hen, and the balance of the eggs, if they show any signs of containing life, placed under the remaining hen. No sprinkling with tepid water, or bobbing of eggs in a pail of warm water is necessary. The hen, as a rule, is a master mechanic and understands her trade better than we do.

Before placing the hen in the coop a good dusting with insect powder is advisable, although a careful poultryman will see that a hen is vermin free when she goes on the nest. At all events a second dusting will do no harm. We keep the hen shut up for one to three weeks before allowing her to roam with her brood. Where small yards are used, one week is long enough, but where hens have a farm range we prefer the longer period.

The best place to set the coop in spring is against a brood fence that breaks the winds from the north and northwest. A southeastern exposure is excellent; a nice green lawn or field is a wonderful carpet for the little chickens to play on, at the same time furnishing the necessary green food.

As to the best food for young chickens, we have but one answer, viz.: Feed any of the specially prepared dry foods, such as Fidelity, Star, Harding, Spratts, or of any other reputable concern, and give fresh water every day. That's all.

The man that sells a show bird to another parts with the right to share honors won by the aforesaid feathered biped when shown by the purchaser. The seller has no moral right to deprive his customer of the privilege bought and paid for. This is an old and established rule, and has been adhered to by genuine fanciers in the past, and is being adhered to by such in the present. But there is a growing tendency on the part of some sellers to claim all honors on birds they sold, and often on birds they imagined they sold. It makes hard feeling in a show room to hear a big breeder and dealer go stalking about and claiming that he bred this and that winner, having sold him to Mr. A. or Mr. B, as the case may be. It is certainly very unsportsmanlike.

PRACTICAL POINTERS

The subject of feed for laying hens in the spring is one which every poultryman should consider. Fowls demand a change of menu, they want something different from the cold weather diet, something light is relished. Where possible allow them a chance to range on a grassy plot some portion of the day, and gather their own green food.

At present I am feeding stale bread soaked, and when the mass has softened, thichen with short, hominy, meal, bran, etc., this for the morning feed, at night soaked oats and corn, half and half. Bought a lot of hens on the heavy order, which under the influence of this coarse and builky feed are doing very nicely.

If you don't think a few years of disuse will ruin a poultry plant, ask me.

These spring days a hen-man needs also to be a weather prophet. It is the height of folly to open a door on the western end of a house and let the west wind sweep the length of the house. At such times let the openings be from the south, and provide a dust bath and some scratching material in a sheltered spot, then see the old hens enjoy themselvs.

It pays to humor the hens; get them so they know you and are not disturbed at your approach. Eggs should be gathered frequently in muddy weather, and it is a lot of satisfaction to be able to go through the house and do your task without driving the hens from the nest.

Above all things don't allow a dog among your fowls, to chase and annoy them. If you have both, decide which it is to be, dogs or hens, and let the other go.

Did you ever notice how some people will keep a half dozen laying hens in a stuffy little coop, yet you always find them well and in the best of condition, laying almost constantly. The reason, therefore, is the food and the care. More poultry is injured in health by over-feeding than under-feeding. A moderate ration of a variety of fowls, and a general thorough oversight will win every time over the heavy feeder, who simply throws the food in and goes away, never caring whether the fowls are active or sluggish, overfat or dropping dead from vertigo. The fat clogs up the internal organs, the fowl gets black in the face, there is a squawk and a couple of kicks, and it is all over, and the owner wonders how he ever loses a fowl, when he feeds them so generously.

It is here the man who handles his fowls wins again. He knows from their weight whether they are carrying more fat than they should, and when such is the case decreases their rations. No matter how much they clamor for more, in such a case give them less food and more exercise.

The little hen who lays an egg nearly every day will not store up too much fat. Such a hen will pay for extra attention. Study how to encourage her in every day laying, there's where the profit comes from.

Is it possible to clear three or two dollars even on each hen a year?. I don't know positively, but the market price of eggs is very attractive and there is no reason why the average profit per hen should not be higher each year.

This is the last chance to cull the breeding pens. Go over them once more, and don't let avarice lead you to keep in a pen a bird you know ought not to be there. Don't breed a bird with a glaring fault which will be instilled into its progeny.

Which Pays Best?

An absolute fact, not mere supposition, is that the old-time, everyday barnyard fowl will only produce about fifty or sixty eggs each per year. All admit that standard-bred poultry has and will produce from ninety to one hundred and fifty eggs per year, according to the care and housing provided them. Everyone can have this average increased and gain a more valuable egg production if they but will that it shall be. This can be done without much additional expense, and with very little more labor than is usually bestowed upon the poor quality fowls. Take hold of it in real earnest, not to be foolish about having expensive houses and high quality poultry, but insist upon having hens that will produce more than one hundred eggs each per year, for it can be readily understood that the hen that produces one hundred eggs per year on the farm is more valuable than the one that produces fifty.

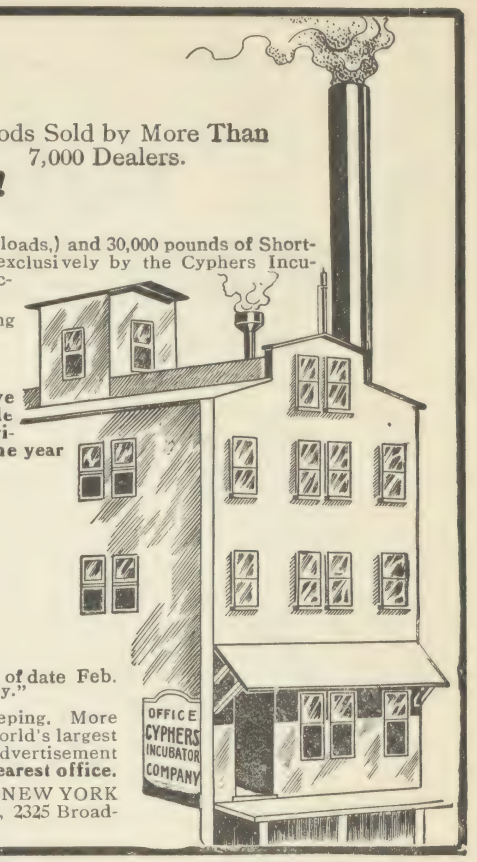
Be Careful Where You Place Your Orders.

The following explains why you should be careful, unless you wish to risk delay, disappointment and personal loss:



Cyphers Incubator Co., Buffalo, N. Y. Randolph, Mich., Feb. 21, 1905.

Gentlemen:—I have worked hard for the last three years to build up a broiler and roaster business, buying a Cyphers Incubator each spring. Thinking I would get out a few more broilers than usual, and seeing an advertisement of the New England agents for the Model Incubator, announcing "six Cyphers Incubators for sale cheap," I sent them $18 Jan. 13th. They promised to ship at once. I had a hatch to put down on Jan. 28th—but no machine. I sent them word and got no satisfaction. I lost this hatch and still I heard nothing from them, but they were advertising "Carloads of Cyphers Incubators," yet could not furnish me with one! To this date I have not heard from them, or my money either. It seems to me that if they cannot meet fair competition without trifling with the public they should be shown up in our magazines. They tried to sell me a "Model" but "I want a Cyphers," as I have tried a few others myself. Can I buy of you a Cyphers machine, (360-egg size) at a reduced rate, having paid your full 1904 price for my last one? It will be hard for me to make up for lost time. Yours respectfully, A. F. ALDRICH.

As a result of the above treatment, Mr. Aldrich sent us an order for a No. 3, 1904 style, brand new Cyphers Incubator, price $18.00. In his letter of date Feb. 27, which contained this order, Mr. Aldrich states: "I have not heard from my money as yet. I am going to see them March 1st and demand the return of my money."

THE FANCY

Adirondack Poultry Club.

A large number of members were present at the eighth annual meeting of the Adirondack Poultry and Pet Stock Club, which was held at the office of the Empire Cooping Company, in Fultonville, April 19. The reports of the various officers showed the organization to be in a very thriving condition.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, J. H. Drevenstedt; vice presidents, William W. Chamberlain, Charles E. Eisenmann, Lucius P. Streeter, Aaron M. Putman, Samuel Laird, Johstown; Frank B. Zimmer, Gloversville; David A. Nichols, Shelton, Conn.; Leonard F. Fish, Frank McKeough, Fultonville; recording secretary, Ralph R. Chant, Johnstown; corresponding secretary and treasurer, Barney W. Mosher, Johnstown; executive committee, Henry J. Quilhot, Edward J. Lorentz, Frank Miller, Charles I. Combes, Johnstown; H. S. Wemple, Fultonville; superintendent of show, Frank B. Sutliff, Johnstown; assistant superintendent, W. J. Weeper, Fultonville.

The matter of holding a show next winter was discussed at length, when it was decided to hold an exhibition in this city during the week of Washington's Birthday, in February, 1906, and the fanciers were very enthusiastic in offering their assistance towards making the affair a grand success.

A feature of the annual meeting that appealed very strongly to all present was a bountiful spread which was served through the courtesy of the Messrs. Wemple Brothers, in the shipping room of the company's plant. J. H. Drevenstedt acted as toastmaster, and among the speakers were Mayor Wemple, Messrs. Miller, Chamberlain, Chant, Quilhot, and L. F. Fish, who also entertained the assemblage with some fine banjo playing and singing. Lorentz and Eisenmann carried off the honors in the eating line. The affair was most enjoyable and reflected much credit to the entertaining ability of Messrs. Wemple.

The New York Poultry and Pigeon Association will hold its seventeenth annual exhibition in the Madison Square Garden, New York City, January 2d to 6th, 1906.

The date of the fourteenth annual exhibition of the Los Angeles Poultry Association has been set for January 8th to 15th 1906, inclusive.

The first annual show of the Tri-City Fancier's Association will be held December 11-15, 1905, at Armory Hall, Davenport, Iowa.

The Cortland County Agricultural Society, of Cortland, New York, will hold its sixty-seventh annual fair, August 22 to 25, 1905. Mr. W. J. Greenman is the secretary of the society.

As the result of the successful show held in Charleston, S. C., during November of last year, the Charleston Poultry Association, a chartered organization with a capital stock of $2,000, began life on the 15th day of April, 1905. The following officers were elected: President, J. M. Connelly; 1st vice-president, Dr. Benj. McInnes; 2d vice-president, J. T. Snelson; treasurer, W. K. McDowell; secretary, T. J. McCarty; assistant secretary, F. M. Petit. The association will hold its show this year December 6th to 13th.

The Fulton County Poultry and Pet Stock Club will hold its first annual exhibition November 20 to 25, 1905, at Odd Fellow's Hall, Gloversville, New York. The club has secured many valuable prizes, which should prove an inducement to exhibitors. The prospects are very good for a highly successful show.

The next annual exhibition of the Middlesex Poultry Association will be held in Town Hall, Middletown, Conn, January 9 to 12, 1906. The judges selected are Nichols, Card and Love. It is the purpose of the association to make the next event surpass anything they have ever held.

A new Connecticut club has been organized under the name of The New Haven County Poultry Association. The following officers were elected: President, W. H. Baldwin; first and second vice-presidents, J. R. Cattrill, Wm. L. Moses; secretary, Wm. J. Hogan, Wallingford, Conn.; assistant secretaries, W. W. Sleeter, Andrew Ennis, jr.; treasurer, Joshua Shute; superintendent, G. W. Bauman.

The new "American Ancona Club" has just completed its organization. The membership includes most of the leading Ancona breeders of the country. Its chief purpose is to disseminate reliable and practical information relative to the real merits of the fowl, as well as to breed to an established standard of perfection—taken largely from the standard of the "British Ancona Club." The officers of the new organization are as follows: President, Leslie L. Viereck; secretary-treasurer, J. Henry Bennett, Viroqua, Wis.; executive committee, O. S. Evans, P. J. Green, B. T. Branthoover.

The Augusta Poultry, Pigeon, Belgian Hare and Pet Stock Club will hold its next show at Augusta, Ga., January 8 to 12, 1906.

The first annual show of The Union County Poultry Association will be held at Monroe, N. C., December 12 to 15, 1905. Mr. F. J. Marshall, of Atlanta, Ga., will judge the show.

At the annual meeting of the Wallkill Valley and Hudson River Poultry Association, March 8th, the following officers were elected: president, Edgar Briggs; vice-presidents, Atherton Chase, Chas. A. Dawson; secretary and treasurer, Hector W. Millspaugh, Walden, N. Y.; superintendent W. Q. Minturn. The next show will be held at Walden, N. Y., December 5 to 8, 1905. Mr. J. H. Drevenstedt has been engaged as one of the judges.

The first regular annual meeting of the American Red Club will be held in October next, at Hagerstown, where the A. P. A. will hold an adjourned meeting, and where there will probably be a notable gathering of poultrymen. F. D. Baerman, secretary, Dunellen, N. J.

The Hancock County Fanciers' Association will hold their next show at Findlay, Ohio, January 9 to 13, 1906. Mr. Phil Feil will be judge.

The Perkiomen Valley Poultry Association was recently formed at East Greenville, Pa., and will hold its first annual show on December 27 to 30, 1905, with Mr. W. Theo. Wittman as judge. The officers elected were: President, Dr. Jos. E. Blanck; vice-presidents, F. G. Christman, W. H. Schultz; secretary, C. A. Mack; assistant secretary, H. X. Daugherty; treasurer, L. Y. Meschter.

ODDS & ENDS

Some of the features of value that make the Great Scott Incubators popular with poultrymen are its extra heavy top and bottom walls, its ingenious heater, constructed to provide a double acting ventilation, supplying equable, warm fresh air, its roomy nursery, its reliable regulator.

The Great Scott heater keeps both eggs and "nest" warm. Its tight walls keep in the warm air. No drafts of cold air reach corners or center. This is one of the reasons why even amateurs get such high per cent hatches in a Great Scott incubator. It not only duplicates the hen's nest but improves on it. A catalogue of the Great Scott Incubators may be obtained by writing to the Scott Incubator Co., Abingdon, Ill., and mentioning this paper.

Health is the absolute necessity to success in stock raising, and anything that will aid in insuring health is a most valuable article. More and more with the growth and development of agricultural interests advanced methods are being applied and the stock raiser cannot afford to be behind the times. The use of stock food, however, is not confined to the use of a preventive such as O. K. Stock Food is a wise precaution which may save him hundreds of dollars.

The sheep raiser is also interested and the needs of his flock, especially the young lambs, require the use of the most healthful food he can supply. The O. K. Stock Food folder should be read by everyone who is interested in stock of whatever kind and number. It will be mailed free to any address upon request. Application should be made to the O. K. Stock Food Co., Monon Building, Chicago, manufacturers of stock and poultry food.

PIGEONS

The Archangel.

BY GEORGE G. FETTEROLF.

There is undoubtedly not another variety of the pigeon family that has received so little attention through the columns of the fancy press as the Archangel, and yet it would be extremely unjust to judge the beauty of the bird from this standpoint; for the lustrious plumage with which nature endowed him gives the Archangel a strong claim for the first place, though, I am sorry to say, this little feathered pet that had such distinguished admirers as the late Sir John Sebright and the Earl of Derby, is generally crowded to the rear. I say little, because most of the Archangels exhibited in this country are much too large, which detracts greatly from the appearance of the bird.

THE ARCHANGEL.

But the press of the fancy is not alone to blame for this; in fact, the largest share of the responsibility for this condition of affairs rests with those persons who have engaged in breeding Archangels. Again, in my opinion, when varieties are being lost sight of, it is the stringent duty of publishers of pigeon literature to endeavor to create, if possible, a favorable sentiment for the restoration of the neglected, and by so doing keep all varieties on an equal footing. It must be admitted by unbiased fanciers, that if the interest in breeding was more general, our show rooms would present a marked improvement in number and quality of stock exhibited and, as a result, visitors would be more numerous and readily bud and bloom into fanciers.

For the past five years I have viewed many of the leading exhibits in this country, and have seen all the various strains of Archangels, and do not hesitate to state termed the "dark ages in Archangel breeding," when rarely a specimen of this beautiful bird could be found with creditable bronzing beyond the legs. Today the ideal Archangel must be evenly bronzed from head to the very tip of the undertail coverts. That such birds are rare is true, but when compared with Archangels otherwise bronzed the old-time ideas are quickly abandoned.

The bronzing adds to the value of an Archangel according to its richness, which should be free from green hues and somewhat transparent, showing a brilliant coloring. The wings and rump should display profuse richness, produced by an interwoven lustre of ebony black, green and purple; though it should be remembered that the position an Archangel may occupy when viewed, often materially interferes with its appearing to the best advantage. The upper tail coverts and even the tail feathers proper, should present the same lustre so desirable in the wings and rump. Some breeders of Archangels might say the lustre could not be produced on tail feathers, and, therefore, I would be especially pleased to show all doubting fanciers birds in my lofts with such tails.

Two other strong points so very essential in the make up of an Archangel are the head and beak properties. The head should be narrow and long, so as to give the snaky effect. Not broad over the skull and flat, but narrow, as stated, and showing gentle curves in every direction from crown, with front crest of one-fourth to one-half inch in length. Second, the beak, which is generally heavy and containing at the junction with the head entirely too much wattle. But the objection to these defects, not unlike others which exist in many birds, cannot be fully realized until compared with the desirable slender or dove-shaped beak and scanty wattle.

With the above defects obviated and a bird rather small in stature, with the addition of eyes a deep orange, legs medium in length, crimson and free from feathers below the hocks and toe nails black, the Archangel will be perfected and win for itself the admiration of all who behold him in his true type and growth of lustre.

System and judgment in poultry keeping are two very important factors for success and profit. System is time saving and judgment is the safety valve—both are economical in many ways.

A Paper Incubator.

Weight, 80 Pounds.

HENS SECRET DISCOVERED

This Incubator is a Wonder and the Leader of All Incubators.
Does not require an expert to get a successful hatch.

Made of Paper—the World's best-known Non-Conductor.
As strong and durable as wood.

TESTED. SUCCESSFUL. PRACTICAL. GUARANTEED.

Will heat up in any outside shed in zero weather in one hour, and will use from 50 to 75 per cent less oil than any other incubator on the market.

No even temperature necessary; any temperature between 95° and 106°, like the hen's, will secure a 90 to 100 per cent hatch of fertile eggs.

Our Brooders—on the market for the past seven years—have demonstrated to the most exacting that they can raise in them 95 to 100 per cent of chicks.

Chicks Grow Fast and Are Strong and Healthy.

Waverly, Iowa, March 8, 1905. 100 per cent. We put your brooder fixtures in a Death Trap Brooder and we had just grand results. Unbelieving at first, we are happy to say we raised every little chick we put in brooder.—I. W. Duvall.

BUFF WYANDOTTES

At Boston, Mass., Jan. 17-21, 1905, was held the Buff Wyandotte Club meeting which brought out all the largest and best eastern breeders and the largest and best exhibit ever made. The Herald Square Winners were there, the Madison Square Winners were there, and Our Winners were there and won their usual Three Out of Five First Prizes, making Five Years in Succession that we have won three out of five First prizes at Boston. This year we also won both second prizes where we lost the first prizes, as follows: Cocks, 2, 3, 4, 5; Hens, 1, 2, 6; Cockerels, 2, 6; Pullets, 1, 6; Pen 1.

Please note our record since 1897, given below, and remember this is the ancestry that keeps our strain of this variety at the front, it dont cost any more than the other kind.

PARTRIDGE WYANDOTTE COLOR

As it is allowable for the poultry fraternity to kick at our American Standard of Perfection, I am going to take the liberty to avail myself of that privilege and say some things about the color of Partridge Wyandottes as demanded by the said Standard. This new member of the Wyandotte family is one of the best, and if allowed to carry the proper color would be one of the handsomest varieties of poultry in existence. They started out with a great rush, but are they holding out? I am afraid not. I find many who have bred them for two or three years are giving them up for the reason that they can not get the proper color and markings.

While I do not claim to be a great breeder or an expert, I have had some experience with them, and I find that if we keep our birds as dark as the Standard demands we are obliged to make extreme double matings and have most of our females come with dark colored shanks. How many Partridge Wyandotte females have clean colored, bright yellow legs? Not many, or at least if there are any they do not find their way into the show room. I think that many breeders never saw a standard colored female with bright yellow legs. All the trouble is, the color demanded is too dark, and the under-color is also too dark. Our English cousins do not want the dark birds, and if I am correctly informed they are making great strides in perfecting these birds over there, and can knock us all out when it comes to striping in males and penciling in females. I also understand that there is so much difference between the English and American Standards that the English breeders can not use American stock. In other words, they do not think our stock fit to breed from, because it is too dark.

Our Standard demands a male bird so dark that a few feet away he could be mistaken for a black bird, and the blue ribbons at the shows are going to such birds. How any man can see any beauty in such a dark color is a mystery to me, while on the other hand what is more beautiful than a fine, well-rounded Partridge Wyandotte male that has a bright orange colored hackle and saddle clearly and distinctly striped with bright, glossy black. You can see such a bird rods away, and he will attract your attention, and the more you look at him the more you like him. The contrast in color is what makes it show up, and it is much more pleasing to the eye—to my eyes at least—than a red that is almost as dark as the black in the center of the feather. When we come to the female it is the same; a dark heavy ground color marked with the black penciling and the two colors so near alike that we have to get close to the bird before the penciling shows. And the dark legs, too—they do not add to the fowls' beauty.

A Partridge Wyandote female to be pretty needs a rich, bright and glossy appearing color, and the most of these dark females are dull and dead in color. They are so dark that their beauty is spoiled. What we should have in the females is a ground color that is a lighter and brighter shade of brown and a color on which the penciling shows up so that it can be seen almost as far as you can see the bird. When it comes to breeding, if we mate these dark or Standard colored birds what do we get? I will not describe the result, will only say that black legs will be very conspicuous. I know of people who have had a fairly well penciled lot of females, a bit too light in color, perhaps, a la Standard, but still good, and they would buy a male of some big winner at some big show, pay a good price for him, mate him to their best females and absolutely ruin their flock. Not a female fit to be seen. The reason was this male was bred from very dark parents, and very likely his mother did not have a bit of penciling on her. Let me tell those who are new to this breed of fowls something about mating, and maybe I may be able to help them get better birds. Do not buy a male unless you know for certain how he is bred. If you want to improve your females do not think you can do so by using a show bird for a sire. If you try it you will ruin what you already have.

For breeding pullets select your best colored and best penciled females. Of course they will be dark in color to agree with Standard demands. Mate them to a male that is lighter in color, and one that runs a bit light in under color, and see that he has penciling or splashes of red in the breast and much red in the fluff, with back and saddle well penciled up, the more the better. The more the male is marked like a hen the better he will be. Do not, no matter who says different, use a dark male to breed pullets. Have him lighter than show color every time. Try and get yellow legs on your pullets even if they should not be just as dark as the Standard demands.

Now, when we mate for cockerels, we must change our color right around and use dark males and light females. Select your very best exhibition male to head your cockerel pen; have him just as near Standard requirements as possible; that means he will be dark in color with dark under color. If you have a few females that are absolute culls, inasmuch as they are light red in color and with no penciling whatever, dark or black under color, with dark, well striped neck hackles, each feather having a clean black center, you should mate these to your best Standard males, and in this way you get clean-breasted males with clean-striped hackles and saddles.

Remember when you make the double matings that your pullet pen should be composed of dark females and a lighter male, and your cockerel mating is a dark male mated to lighter females. Single mating will not give you anything worth having, and there is no use trying to breed Partridge Wyandottes this way. If the Standard would allow us to have lighter birds, and did not demand such a dark under color in the male we could then use single matings with good results.

Why those who made the Standard, and I suppose they were men who had the best interests of the breed at heart, should in their wisdom saddle the Partridge Wyandotte with such a dark color is a mystery to me. I, for one, claim that it is not near as beautiful as the lighter orange color, and that it is many times harder to get, and when we do get it we get dark legs on our females. Give us a lighter color and we will get far handsomer males and much better penciling and yellow legs on the females. As the Standard now is, it means that this breed must ever be a fancier's fowl, for the people at large will never have anything to do with it.

The Necessity for Good Breeding Stock.

One of the most important features for success in the start is to have good stock to begin with. In writing of this, Judge W. C. Denny advises as follows:

"If stock were to be bought, I would say do not get 'over your head' in the attempt to get quantity; far better put the money you care to invest in a pair or a trio, rather than a pen. Your start will necessarily be a greater success. The way would be to write to some reliable breeder, tell him the amount you have to invest, and leave the mating to him. You can rest assured you will receive full value, for remember, it is he, not you, who has to keep his reputation for fair dealing. If you think you would rather be your own judge, visit the yards and do your own selecting. It will be well to keep in mind the following points: Shape, size, color, and low comb, in the order named. Shape comes first, for it is the making of the bird, the type that gives them their name; size is next in order, as it has been a great point to get the majority of good colored birds that have low combs, etc., to standard weight; color is third. The Buff Rocks have the buff so thoroughly bred in them that at the present time I value most the other two points mentioned ahead of it, in securing breeding stock. I do not mean to say that they have buff in them so that all bred will be solid buff. If they were, there would not be much fun in it. But the amateur who expects a trio of solid birds for $15 woul dthen have some other fault to find with them. I mean that a large percentage have shown remarkable evenness in the surface and under-color. This last point is valued so highly by some breeders that they lose sight in the clearness in the surface, which should not be the case. I like under-color, and as much of it as can be had, so long as the true buff in the surface does not deteriorate. Of course the under-color must be pure, not blue or slate."

Of all things, the most important is Publicity makes popularity, providing you have a good subject to work up, which is certainly true of this variety.

WHITE WYANDOTTE.

Houdans.

The Great Winter Layers.

Within the past two years this famous old breed has begun to exact its own, and today it is forging ahead of many of the new mongrel varieties. We must re-echo the sentiment expressed in this paper recently, that "it was doubtful if the English or American fancier has ever produced a breed the equal in utility of the Houdan in its original purity." Of no breed has the fancier exacted more and given less in return. In fifteen years the only improvement we can credit to him is the small V comb instead of the large leaf comb.

Against this one improvement we find he has robbed the Houdan of weight by line breeding; of shape and color by the infusion of creve blood, and of the last vestige of utility by the recrossing with the White Crested Black Polish for a large crest.

Since the days of Daniel Pinckney the Houdan has stood still at times and gone backward at others,, but seldom if ever has the breed taken a progressive step. We have bred Pinckney Houdans for fourteen years, and as utility and show birds we find them today as he found them then—without a peer.

The Houdan lays the largest eggs of any breed. Not even excepting the Minorca, and as winter layers they have no equal. As densely feathered as any breed in existence, with no comb or wattle to freeze, they are also as active as a Leghorn. The pullets will weigh six pounds, be laying when six months old and will continue throughout the severest weather in unheated coops. We have tried them out in northern New York when zero is just normal and twenty below not unusual, and our pullets have layed for us continuously all winter. Keep the Houdan working for its food and even the coldest weather will not disturb it.

If the Leghorn had no comb to freeze, we all know its great activity would keep it shelling out four cent eggs each day. Here we have a fowl without comb or wattle, with a coat of feathers double the density of the Leghorn breed, and just as happy and active. Remember the Houdan is the favorite fowl of France, where popularity is but another name for fitness, and where utility is exacted.

The true Houdan should be broad shouldered, deep full breasted, with a long back and low tail, and placed medium or low on its legs. The hens hould weigh from seven to eight pounds, and the cock birds from eight to ten pounds. Don't be afraid of getting your Houdans too big, for their great activity keeps them from becoming too fat.

They should be mottled from beak to toe, and clear black sections are to be avoided, as they denote creve blood in abundance. The undercolor should be black, and each third or fourth feather should be tipped with white. Breed away from crests with black borders and white centers, as they show Polish qualities. The black and white feathers in the crest should be intermingled.

If the undercolor is a good black, the fowl will not fade, but if it should be a gray or frosty color, each molt will find the bird lighter in color. Never use a fowl as a breeder unless it has a black undercolor for there lies the secret of the "color fast" strains.

Mate your best laying hens to a cock bred from a great layer, and in a few years you will note the improvement in their egg yield. We have mated up our breeding pens for fourteen years on this principle, and as a result we have today on our Manchester farm one hundred and fourteen hens that have a pullet year egg record of two hundred eggs or over by Ideal trap nest. Sixty-eight of these hens have a record of 225 eggs or over, and our very best show hen has a record of 251 eggs and a weight of eight pounds. The record making is done in the first year, and the very best are used for breeders the next season, when they are allowed nothing but dry feed and no forcing foods. In this way almost every egg is fertile, and the chicks hatched have a great desire to stay alive.—E. F. McAvoy.

Mediterranean Classes.

In looking over the Mediterranean classes at the exhibitions of 1904 and 1905 we find the White Leghorn the leader in numbers, and in general distribution over a wide expanse of territory, the favorite among egg farmers. This is especially the case in New York State, where more White Leghorns are bred for egg production than in any part of the world. It proves the White Leghorn to be the great white egg business fowl.

As to the show types exhibited in the past season, there will be much diversity of opinion. It seems as if the original graceful, sprightly, medium sized, fine combed and headed Leghorn of seven years ago has received some hard knocks at the hands of judges, who, honest as they were, failed to grasp the real ideal of the true Leghorn. Coarseness in body, comb and head points, albeit attended with whiteness of plumage, have misled exhibitors and judges in favoring this type. Briefly speaking it was a White Minorca with yellow legs masquerading as a White Leghorn. Still the true type of White Leghorn exists and wins, as was demonstrated at the Madison Square, N. Y., and Boston Shows, the judges at both being well up in the business. As to Brown Leghorns, we must confess a regret that so dark a color was selected for the reddish hackle and saddle of the males. The striping of the hackle and saddle feathers, so much sought after, is lost in the darkness of the cherry red demanded by the Standard. It takes a very close examination of the bird to find these fine points. When the orange red hackle and saddle were in vogue, the striping could be seen without handling, and it seemed much more effective. In addition to this, the female progeny of standard mated birds was far better in color.

As to the female line of Brown Leghorns, special pullet matings have produced wonderful specimens in color. But we regret to say many of the finest colored specimens failed very much in color of shanks and beak, the color being nearer white than yellow, especially in hens.

We believe Brown Leghorn breeders have a fine task before them to breed up to standard the present type of the popular and "dainty Browns." Buff Leghorns are better than ever and stand in the front rank as a clean, well bred variety of buff plumage. Black Leghorns have not improved and a little more attention to correct shape and better head points would help them a great deal.

Minorcas have shown decided improvement in head points and size, and were better than ever last season. White Minorcas are also looming up, and with a little more care in selecting better combed males should crowd their black cousins very close.

Andalusians have been considerably above the average, and seem to be gaining in popularity. The lacing of females is far better as a rule, while the hackles and saddles on males show more intensity of the black color than in past years. Black Spanish are at a standstill, and more is the pity. One of the grandest of the Mediterranean varieties, it has been allowed to take a back seat. Anconas were numerous and have shown very good quality. This breed will bear watching.

Langshans have been allowed to fall by the wayside also, and this is a sore spot to every true fancier. The regal appearance and magnificent quality of the Black Langshan is patent to all true lovers of a thoroughbred fowl. From a beauty and utility standpoint the Black Langshan is in a class by itself. It will come again when the novelties are dead and gone.

A Sitting Hen's Reflections.

Here I am, only a poor sitting hen, but placed in a very queer position. Ever since that talk about my faults and my good qualities I have been unable to decide whether I was worth my feed or not. It hurts me to see people condemn my children because I was obliged to have them hatched by machines. I certainly took as much trouble in preparing the eggs as usual, and the chicks hatched out so lively and got such good care that I am sure they will become beauties. At the same time I feel hurt that others should say I was such an unclean, clumsy, reckless being. I like to have a neat home, a good dust bath in which to perform my toilet, and enough room for myself and my family, that I can turn around without crushing any of them. You see I am obliged to board, and I am sure you know how poor the accommodations in some boarding houses are. My cousin, who boards next door, never gets a chance to clean herself, and she is put in such unclean quarters that she can hardly ever hatch out a brood, and a relative of hers actually died on the nest because the vermin were too much for her. Of course there are "bad eggs" among the sitting hens, but I think if they all lived with a nice family as I do there would be less complaint.—A Sitting Hen.

Poultry in the South.

We have a letter from the South, in which we are asked to furnish a copy of a law that might be used as a form for drawing a bill in the interests of poultry growing in Florida. Unusual efforts are being made throughout the South to induce the State authorities to further the interest in poultry to the extent of experimenting to find out the best methods for handling poultry in that section where the heated term is so continuous and enervating.

Few stop to consider the fact that the whole cotton product of the South is not equal in value to the eggs consumed in the United States. Yet the interest of the whole country was violently aroused at the mention of boll weavel or over production.

From Bisbee, comes a letter asking for information about the Arizona climate, to enable them to better the income from their hens. An application sent to the State Department in these localities brought forth the reply that those to whom we wrote did not have the time to devote to the question. Double the number of persons are interested in poultry growing than are directly interested in cotton. More capital is involved in poultry than in cotton. There is not the least chance of over production in poultry, but it is almost impossible to arouse State investigation and departmental aid for poultry culture.

That which has happened is likely to happen again. For three years the supply of poultry has not half equalled the demand. Grow plenty of good poultry to meet this demand in the future.

BOYER'S TALK

Of all months in the year, we doubt if there is one that gives the poultryman more pleasure than May. The weather, as a rule, is so exhilarating, the stock seems so active and happy, and things are moving along so smoothly, that it seems as if a new lease of life is given. Having passed through a rugged winter, the poultryman and fowls enjoy the balmy air of the month of May probably more than any one else could.

It is encouraging to note how the April-hatched chicks are thriving, and how the newly-born ones seem bright and active. Even the hens that are not broody seem determined to shell out all the eggs possible to atone for the vacation they will take during the period of broodiness.

Do not let the April-hatched chicks get a set-back. Keep them growing. Give them all the encouragement by good feed and comfort. Regularity in feeding is most important, for it is a serious loss when a chick pines for hunger. The fact must not be lost sight of that the crop of a chick is small, and will not hold over a thimbleful of food at a time. When that gets empty, nature calls for more.

Newly-hatched chicks should be fed every two hours, but the April hatched ones now can do as well if given food only every three hours. The rule should be, a little food at a time, but that often. Never allow food to remain before the chicks after they have filled their crops. This holds good for both dry and mash foods. The latter will quickly sour, while the former will not be affected in quality. Yet if the same food is constantly before the youngsters, they will tire of it.

Keep the chicks busy, and this is best done by throwing some fine seeds among a lot of leaves or other light litter. The little ones will soon learn that if they work they can find food.

All broody hens should be set now in as cool a spot as possible, and we know of no better location or manner than the barrel-plan which we adopted several years ago. We place a barrel on its side in some shady spot, and fill in several inches of earth. In the rear of this nest we hollow out a large hole in the dirt, and in it place straw. A china nest egg is placed in the nest, and the broody hen put in it at night. In the front opening of the barrel we place a board, to prevent her from getting out at night, and also to prevent a rat or some animal from getting in to her. If she will stick to the nest for a few days, we give her the eggs. Over the top of the nest we have a covering made of either Neponset or Rawhide paper, which we tie fast to the barrel with a piece of rope, and in addition place a few bricks on top to hold it firm and proof from wind storms. In front of the barrel nest we have an A-shaped lath run, four feet in length, in which the hen has plenty of room to eat, drink and dust herself. We referred to this style nest in our April Calendar, but as there have been requests for a further explanation, we give it more fully here.

This is the time of the year when hens are apt to have hidden nests. if allowed to have free range. Where such nests are found, care should be taken that the eggs do not go into the market basket, for there is no telling how old they are, or in what condition they will be found when opened. We make it a rule that every egg we find outside of the regular nests, must go to the kitchen, where they will be carefully opened, and if found doubtful then thrown away.

This brings to mind the oft-asked question: "Why is it that when a hen steals her nest, and is not molested when she wants to set, she comes off with a large brood?" It is a fact that such hens do seem unusually successful, but we do not believe that it is due solely to the fact that she has stolen her nest. We believe there are other reasons. of which we have formed a few opinions. First, we believe that much of the success can be credited to the fact that the hen makes her nest on the ground—a more natural state. It was this theory that led us to adopt the barrel nest. In a number of tests, we found that we had better hatches and stronger chicks when hatched in our barrel nests than we had when we resorted to the regular nest boxes, as we formerly used, and which are yet used by many to a great extent. Our second opinion in the matter is that the eggs in these hidden nests are as a rule laid by one hen, and if she has been laying fertile eggs the vigor and strength of each egg is about the same. It is a fact that there are hens in almost every flock that vary in fertility of eggs. The eggs from some hens will be strongly fertile, others only partly so, and others not at all. This may be due to a weakness of the hen. or it may be caused by inattention of the male. Both hens and cocks have their favorites.

But the question comes forward: "Why is it that the hatch is so large, when the eggs were laid at different periods? Does that not conflict with the theory that the fresher the egg the better the hatch?" We think not. The fact remains that the fresher the egg the better the hatch.

There are conditions in this hidden nest that are not so apt to be in the one we make. First the nest gets all the moisture needed from the earth, in a manner that we can hardly imitate. Second, the hen is never tampered with. If there remains life in the eggs, she sits all the more closely, and the chicks she has hatched helps to add warmth to the unhatched eggs. Having no chance of being chilled, every hatchable egg is bound to produce its young.

But for all that, not every hen that steals her nest and broods her eggs, brings forth a good hatch. We have known them to come with only a few chicks, and again without any, and this is explained by accepting the belief that the eggs from some hens are only partially fertilized or not at all.

The warm weather is apt to bring forth the lice tribe, and there will be all sorts of trouble for the beginners. We do not mean by that that lice do not visit the poultry farms of the experienced, for they do. But the practical man does not meet with the same disaster for the reason that he is on the lookout the entire year. He makes it a rule to clean up the droppings each morning, is liberal with the use of both whitewash and kerosene. Lice thrive in filth, and quickly leave a place that is cleanly kept. Cleaning out the houses every week is no guarantee. The work must be done daily. On the farm of the writer, just as soon as the feeding and watering are done, the platforms under the roosts are cleaned. This work we make imperative, every day in the year, no matter how the other work crowds.

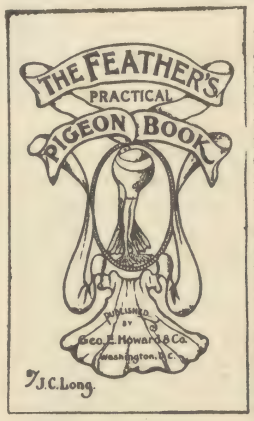
There is no trouble to prevent the ravages of lice if we follow strict rules of cleanliness, and this work will not only prevent lice, but greatly lessens the percentage of sickness.

We have a double run for each flock. Instead of making a run one hundred feet long for each flock, we divided the space into two yards. One of these yards is in front of the house and the other in the rear. While the fowls are occupying the one run we sow vegetable seed in the other. This not only gives us extra benefit of the land, but affords excellent green stuff after we have gathered what vegetables we can use. Later on—about August—we plant rye in these vacant runs, and as soon as it has grown two or three inches in height we turn the poultry on that. By adopting the above plan we have little or no trouble to solve the green food question, and our stock are always in the pink of condition. Where fowls are compelled to occupy the same run the year round, a hand plow or a heavy hoe or spade should be used every week or so to turn up the soil. It will induce the fowls to take extra exercise, and besides they will find a lot of worms, bugs, seed, etc., in the soil which will be of great benefit to them.

Now is a good time to remove the windows in the hen house, and substitute a one-inch wire frame. This is the best way to ventilate the houses at night, and at the same time there will be no drafts. Comfortable fowls are not only contented, but they are generally hardy.

The broody hens are beginning to crowd the nests. Our rule is to set all such up until the last of this month. Some of these late chicks will be slower in maturing, but generally chicks hatched in June, if given a shady run, and kept in good condition, will catch up to those that come out in May. Besides, if not wanted for any other purpose, they make excellent market stock. It is far better to set the cheap eggs and produce market stock than it is to sell the eggs for table use at a figure little above the cost of production.

Those who do not wish to set any more hens this season will be using all sorts of methods to break up the hens of their broodiness. Not a few will resort to some cruel methods. There are a number of ways of doing the work that are not only successful, but are humane. The first is to pen the hen in a cage alone, and leave her take her own time in getting over the fever, and the other is to place her in a covered run alongside of a similar run containing a vigorous male bird. The latter will run up and down alongside the wire fence between them, and in this way worry the hen so that she will gradually change her mind and go back to laying again. We have adopted the latter method on our farm, and prefer it to all others, and never place the hen back to the regular pen until she has again started laying.



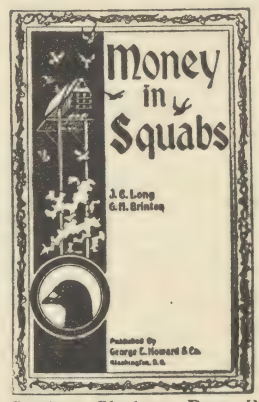
The drinking water supply must not be neglected, and now that the days are hot, it is best to replenish the supply twice a day. The fountain should be kept in a shady place. See that the drinking vessels are kept clean, for disease germs lurk in filth, and in no way are they more fruitful than in filthy drinking vessels and impure water.

As May is generally considered the end of the "eggs for hatching season," many breeders begin removing male birds from the flocks and pen them in separate quarters. This gives the hens a rest, and is also beneficial to the male birds. It also has another advantage in giving unfertile eggs which can be disposed of for table use. Unfertile eggs will keep longer than those that are fertilized, and there will also be no chance for unprincipled persons getting eggs at market price that will give them a hatch of good stock.

If trap nests are used, the poultryman by this time knows which are his profitable layers and which are either only ordinary or not worth anything. It will pay better to market such, and give room and time to the better ones. Every flock has its drones, and the sooner they are removed the better. In the trap nest reports published in the American Fancier, the reader will find this work carried out by the writer. At the end of the season it is proposed to show that each year there is enough stock carried over, that it is entirely unprofitable, entailing an extra cost that will take some time for the workers of the flock to overcome.

The wise poultryman will not harbor anything that will not give him a profit, and the trap nest method gives him a chance to get the same results with a less number of hens, and at a greatly reduced cost. That is scientific poultry culture, and it is the only kind that pays.

The Feather's Practical Pigeon Book.



"The Feather's Practical Pigeon Book," by J. C. Long, is just from the press. It is superbly printed on calendered paper, and illustrated with a half-hundred fine half-tones. The cover is of heavy material, printed in colors. It is just the kind of book that will be read and appreciated by the masses. This book is credited with being the best and most practical book published on breeding and raising all kinds of pigeons. Those who have seen it can not speak too well of it, and it will undoubtedly prove the text-book of the country on pigeon culture. No library or home of a pigeon fancier is complete without it. The illustrations are said to be the finest and most accurate ever drawn, and I do not hesitate to return the money to all who are not satisfied with it. Price 50 cents, postpaid.

Editorial Gossip.

Dr. H. F. Ballard is rather facetious in his caption "What is the matter with the Cochins." He is even more interesting than ever if we are to judge by his letter, which we quote in full:

"The editor thinks all should join hands to help the Cochins, but all are not going to do it. With almost every poultry journal in the land busily engaged in booming something else, with nine-tenths of the breeders falling over themselves to boost the American classes, with a lot of mercenary fellows manufacturing new varieties resembling the general purpose fowl, out of all sorts of mixtures, with many of them using the Asiatics to help form something new, with the committee of the A. P. A. loosing their heads and holding back the Standard catering to the general scrimmage to get as many new ones in as possible before 'the thing' is published, it is no wonder the old standard varieties are lost in the shuffle and crushed out of existence after contributing to help make the things which kill them. If there were not a few breeders who refused to be hoodooed out of their senses by the hue and cry after fads, there would be no varieties in existence today but 'Rocks' and 'Dots' and a lot of new conglomerations."

Now, to begin with Doctor, there is nothing the matter with the Cochins, they are just as good as they ever were—but there may be something the matter with those owning the Cochins. This is more than likely, and if everyone owning Cochins chooses to sit down and let the other fellows occupy the limelight of prominence, it is no one's fault but his own.

We are not satisfied with the pessimistic views of the Doctor as expressed above, nor do we agree with him that the poultry world should stop with breeds like the Asiatics, Americans, and a few others. Inventive genius is as alive in the poultry world as in any other sphere, and new breeds are demanded to suit all desires. There is no reason why a new breed should be cried down by the admirers of the older ones—there is plenty of room for all, and the sooner this fact is appreciated the better. The greatest trouble is with the breeders of the older varieties, they seem content to let them rest on their laurels, and in a short while interest has died out in them completely. Fads too, are responsible for many of the "new conglomerations," and there is no use worrying about this; fads must come and fads must go—or else we will have very little to engage our attention. What the Doctor particularly needs do is to positively decline to be "hoodooed" and go to work in earnest in keeping the Cochins before the public. It is a simple proposition if we keep everlastingly at it.

We are glad to notice that there is a strong disposition to make war against those who prepare adulterated feeds with rice hulls, buckwheat hulls and other ingredients that are not only without value as food but injurious to all stock. Rice hulls contain almost 50 per cent of wood fibre, and from 15 per cent to 20 per cent silica or sand. The hulls are very sharp and irritating whenever they are taken as food. It has been recorded by the Professors of the Wisconsin Experimental Station that the use of rice hulls as food has killed many animals through the irritation of the stomach and intestines. If this injurious ingredient will destroy the life of cattle it must be a great discomfiture to poultry, and perhaps many that die for causes unknown have been destroyed through the use of these adulterated foods. Too much can not be said against this, and while we are very much in favor of many of the food preparations sold on the market, we know that some of them are not fit for poultry or any other stock to eat.

As long as manufacturers stick to good, sound, wholesome grain for making the foods which are sold as poultry and chick foods they will prove of benefit to those who purchase them, but if we are to be imposed upon as some of the recent analyses made in the West and throughout several sections of the country disclose, people will have to take cognizance of this and discontinue the purchase of any foods except those printing the formula on the packages.

We are all familiar with the fact that hens are given to eating eggs during the winter months, a habit that comes to them from idleness and from the lack of proper food, but we have recently had our attention called to an instance where the hens continued this practice during warm weather, and like egg-eating dogs, as soon as they would hear the cackle of the hen they would rush frantically for the hen's house to eat the eggs. Dogs will do this, but we never knew hens to be such passionate egg eaters.

The writer states that he has tried the following remedies to dissuade the hen from the habit by throwing a lot of china eggs upon the floor of the hen house, or buying barrels of egg shells anl dumping them in the house and yards for the hens to feed on for a while, but he never was successful in breaking up the habit until he become informed of the nest with the false bottom, which permits the eggs when laid to roll down out of the hen's nest right into a small box below. This successfully broke up the loss of the eggs. Whether it has cured the habit the writer can not state.

It is much easier to teach the hens these bad habits than to break them of it. Nests should always be up off the floor and dark, so that one hen can scarcely notice another upon the nest. Make the nest an undesirable place to loaf about on account of its lonely position and the darkness. Feed the poultry plenty of green food, meat and shell during the winter months, and never allow the eggs to become frozen in the nest and in this way break them of the habit. To prevent the hens from learning to eat the eggs is easier than to break them of the habit after they have acquired it.

Hens are valuable from the fact that they are continually reproducing saleable products that always bring cash values. The hen is a continual source of income, and if properly cared for there is scarcely a day in the year but that she would provide enough capital to buy a meal for any family, even though there might not be any other income in sight.

The whole country is wild about incubators and brooders. One man states that his incubator hatches the eggs in two weeks; another that he has a new kind of hen that lays eggs that hatch in seventeen days. If this incubator man and this egg man could join hands they might produce a breed of poultry that would give us ready made to order broilers and roasters ready for the spit without any further trouble.

Prof. Graham, of Ontario Agricultural College, is becoming an enthusiastic poultry writer. Of late he has been urging the people to teach the youngsters about the farm to care for poultry as their own. He states that there is no other kind of live stock in which the young can develop their faculties of observation and of improvement, and urges the people throughout the country to encourage the boys and girls in poultry growing, by permitting them to have poultry of their own. This we consider the best of advice, for there is nothing that will develop the attention of the young people so much as caring for their own property, which in addition gives them a steady income even though it may be very small.

We know of many people who keep the poultry for their wives and children. The wives and the children must care for the poultry-house, feed and grow the poultry, dress them for market, gather the eggs, carry them in and sell them, but they are usually compelled to turn over the product thus gained for paying the grocer bill and the balance to fill the tobacco pouch of the lord of the farm. This is not teaching children independence and the care of poultry for their own benefit. If the farmer can be brought to understand that the wife and children are his partners in everything, including the pocketbook, things would go better on the farm. But as long as the women and children must drag out their existence in working aimlessly with no cash return for their share, the poultry and other things entrusted to their care will not prosper as they should.

After several years of hard pounding in favor of the Columbian Wyandottes other poultry publications are beginning to wake up to the fact that the Columbians are among the coming popular varieties.

It has been the habit of this paper to step forward and assume an advanced position on all things. We shall continue to do this, and trust that our readers are fully aware that we always present the new things for their consideration.

It will be to your benefit in the near future to consider crate fattening of the poultry you contemplate sending to market. It pays almost double to do this. Everyone could follow it to a certain extent, and it is worthy of your attention. Crate fattened poultry is the finest of all dressed poultry, and when finished with the cramming machine it makes most beautiful market poultry.

It is never time wasted to use good motherly hens for growing fine broods of exhibition fowls. Many of the best that are sent to the show rooms are reared in this way. The influence of the animal heat from the body of the mother hen has a beneficial effect on the growing chick, and helps them to mature quickly.

It is always best to confine the poultry rather closely when fattening them for market. Small enclosures that are kept perfectly clean are the best for this purpose. Feed them all they will eat and give them just enough exercise to keep them healthy. In this way they can be fattened quickly and at considerable less cost.

The next Lititz, Pa., show will be held the last week in December. This is one of the best and most successful shows held in the Keystone State each year.

The poultry dates for the Lewis and Clark Fair at Portland, Oregon, are October 5th to 12th. Elmer Dixon has been appointed superintendent of the poultry department. The judges have not been announced as yet, but will be selected from the ermine wearers on the Pacific Coast, although efforts are being made by Harry Collier and others to get "Big Theo." Hewes to officiate in some of the classes. Hewes has been out in that country before, and his work has been very satisfactory.

The Ancona fowl is becoming quite popular on the Pacific Coast, its splendid egg-laying qualities pushing it rapidly to the front. The climate seems to suit it exceedingly well.

Early chickens in northern and eastern New York promise to be rather a small crop. The backward cold spring is largely responsible for this. But in a climate like the one in the above-mentioned section and which is not an exception, but a rule each year, chickens hatched in May and June are far preferable to those that escaped from the shells when the thermometer was below the zero mark.

The advice to hatch eggs early so as to have birds ready for the early fall shows or for early laying purposes is all very good when followed in a climate adapted to such. In more southern localities it is positively necessary to start chickens early in March and get them well along before the hot dry weather of June, July, and August reduces the vegetation forage and animal food. The best growing season in the northern section mentioned is in June and July, when vegetation is at its best. Chickens fairly "jump" then, and do not get a set-back as is often the case with the early birds. But conditions must be favorable, i. e., cleanliness, shade, good quarters at night, plenty of exercise, pure grain, food, and water. It all looks simple enough, but it takes eternal vigillance to raise a flock of chickens to a high standard of excellence.

Bantam eggs are now being set, and until the end of June thousands of little pets will see the light of day. Game Bantams should be started early, as they require a longer time to develop into show specimens than most of the ornamental varieties. One great danger in hatching Game Bantams is in the overfeeding of the hens that lay the eggs. This causes soft-shelled eggs and otherwise interferes with the fertility of the eggs. A dose of Epsom salts and cutting down the feed one-third or more will soon remedy the evil.

A subscriber who has experienced some trouble in getting rich-colored yolks in his eggs asks several questions regarding the influences or agents that govern the color of the yolk. The coloring matter in the yolk is iron, which agent gives color to the blood. The coloring compound of the egg is supposed to be the same as that in the blood. It is easily assimilated, and eggs are regarded as suitable food for anæmic persons, as they present a concentrated and generally easily digested form of nutriment rich in iron. The iron compound of the egg has, in fact, been termed a "hœmatogen" because it is probable that from it the blood of the chicken is derived. The amount of iron in the yolk of an egg would appear to increase with the intensity of its color, and there is little doubt that the maximum is reached in the righly colored yolk of the egg produced by a fowl existing in healthy surroundings. The yolk of the best eggs is of a rich, reddish color rather than a pale yellow.

Our western Solon, friend Rigg, evidently is not suffering with a glass arm. He gives the following advice in the May American Poultry Journal: "When you do any whitewashing use the old-fashioned brush. It does the work more effectively and in a much neater way than that done by a force pump. The latter is all right if you prefer tattoo work." We will take the force pump Bro. Rigg every time. There are some very good ones on the market, and the spray will penetrate every crevice. The brush is all right for a small hen house with fairly even walls and ceilings, but when it comes to slinging a brush all day long over a long, large and uneven surface, the fun ceases, and the pump begins to loom up as a mighty fine saver of labor, religion and clothes.

Speaking of white wash, the following recipe for making a really good article will be timely: Take half a bushel of unslacked lime, slack it with boiled water, cover during the process to keep in steam, strain the liquid through a fine sieve or strainer, and add to it a bag of salt previously dissolved in warm water, three pounds of ground rice boiled to a thin paste and stirred while hot, a half pound of whiting and one pound of clean glue, previously dissolved by soaking in cold water and hanging over a slow fire in a small pot hung in a large one and filled with water. Add five gallons of hot water to the mixture, stir well and let it stand covered a few days. It should be applied hot, for which purpose it can be kept in a kettle or portable furnace. A pint of this mixture, if properly applied, will cover one square yard, and will be almost as serviceable as paint for wood, brick or stone, and is much cheaper than the cheapest paint. This is the recipe used by the Government at Washington, on light houses.

Cheap eggs, cheap fowls, and cheap papers, make cheap breeders. Finely-bred fowls and eggs therefrom cannot be produced cheaply; neither can thoroughbred horses, cattle, dogs or swine. The breeders of the latter invariably select those papers to advertise in which furnish the thorough-bred buyers. In such papers first-class stock commands first-class prices.

Considerable fuss is made over "how to pack eggs for hatching." It is really a very simple affair, but some writers must exhaust their scientific knowledge in stating the whys and wherefores of this highly mysterious business of packing eggs. One writer went so far as to recommend cushions made of springs to avoid jarring on the cars during transit. Another places the eggs in a certain position, and uses only certain packing materials. We have seen and handled a great many different egg packages, and often can read the breeder's character in his method of shipping eggs. The careful methodical man will certainly send a package that reflects his methods. The careless man trusts to the patent egg packages and the express companies to supply what he lacks. Those who have had a taste of the great care the express companies take will hesitate to accept the latter as a proper guardian of a valuable basket of eggs. The safest and best package we ever used, and one in use by many old breeders, is the basket. The eggs are wrapped in paper and then packed singly in a bed of fine excelsior, using plenty of the latter. Such a basket is light, but a trifle more bulky than a box, but it is absolutely safe during transit. We shipped hundreds of eggs by this method in the past and never heard of an egg being broken. The excelsior is elastic and the jarring cannot be serious. There are a number of good patent egg packages on the market, which facilitate the packing somewhat, but the principle is the same as in the method given above.

What has become of the Redcaps? A little over ten years ago they were quite popular and made some big records as egg layers, surpassing all varieties, except the Hamburgs. When hens of a variety can be formed that will lay over 200 eggs in a year it is not such a bad idea to try and keep it from falling by the wayside. And we are of the opinion that the Redcap was such a breed or variety of fowl. There lived a breeder in New York State in the days when Redcaps were quite numerous, who succeeded in getting hens of that breed to lay 225 eggs per annum, and the eggs were of good size and white in color.

The White Indians also deserve better treatment. They are among the best of our domesticated fowls for table purposes, besides being good layers. As a top cross on or with other varieties they produce a carcass that is a "seller" in the best markets. What the Buff Indians will accomplish we do not know. Brother William Card can enlighten us on that score. He has had them under his wing quite a number of years, and from what we can learn they seem to be ready to join the popular buff family of fowls now so much in demand.

CHAS. T. CORNMAN.

THIS is a portrait of Mr. Chas. T. Cornman, the well-known Bantam breeder of the Keystone State. He is one of those fellows who has made a great hit with the pigmies of poultrydom, and is to be always found in the front ranks of fanciers and advocates of fancy poultry. The pose and attitude of our model is an exact reproduction of the original, and would score ninety-six points under any score card or comparison judge.

BROWN'S BUDGET

What a grand opportunity poultry affords on farms where the hillsides are too steep to work, or on very rocky bush-grown land. Poultry would soon turn these lands into sources of profit.

Genuine fowls are great roamers and persistent insect hunters. As they are not real scratchers they are generally allowed full liberty and are said to do more good than harm. They are the policemen of the farmers' flocks. Day or night, any unusual noise or sight will start their alarm cry. A brood of young guineas are as handsome as birds.

Filth is the foundation of part, if not a majority of, diseases, and poultry houses and yards are no exception to this rule.

Feed all the spring onions, radish and lettuce scraps from the table to the young chicks. Chop them fine. The chicks are very fond of such things, especially if cooped on bare runs.

Talking about geese, a Mr. Linton said to the Oxford Farmers Club: "Four geese are good for a pound of feathers every six weeks, and their feathers are worth fifty cents each year. We are looking for something that pays. We have it in the goose. But it is not fashionable now for farmers' wives and daughters to pick geese. It's hard to find any fancy work that pays much. Any smart girl can make muscle and money raising geese.

Bee keeping, small fruit, and poultry raising, make up a sure trio of money bringers for the earnest, ambitious man. It is not so much the number of acres, but what is produced on them. Some men are land poor—too much land. It is the intensive methods that pay. Concentration of effort to an extent where everything can receive personal supervision is what counts in any business.

The South Carolina poultrymen are very successful with caponizing. They get the capons to mother broods of chicks, and they are as motherly as the most attentive hens. By the time the chicks are old enough to be weaned, the capons are in prime condition. It may be asked what relation a capon will be to the chicks it cares for. Probably a step father and second cousin to the incubator.

Eggs are the surest marketable product that the farm yields. They are always a cash commodity. With an abundance of eggs on the farm, the home table can fairly groan with good things, and there is always ready cash for groceries.

An orchard is almost an ideal run for fowls or chicks. For chicks after the corn get knee high, the corn field, near the house makes an excellent foraging grounds. The range will afford plenty of insect food, and the semi-shade is just what is desired—what grand opportunities the farmer can make for his flocks.

"Now is the time" to make liberal use of air slacked lime. Scatter it in the houses after cleaning them, and distribute it broadcast on the bare chicken runs. Lime dust destroys insect pests and noxious odors, and purifies the premises.

If you can do so, change the location of your chicken runs every three years—every other year would be better. Lime the runs liberally, plow and plant and raise a crop that requires cultivation. This will take all the chicken impurities of contamination from the soil.

The successful poultryman doesn't know what the so-called trouble to many others is. He realizes there is no such thing as "luck." System and regularity keeps trouble away, and luck has no claim on the business poultryman's success.

Prejudice often overrides reason and becomes a serious stumbling block to progress. The farmer who wrestles with scrub stock is a good illustration of what stubborn prejudice costs.

Eggs used in the arts amount to millions. Calico print works use over 40,000,000 dozen a year; photography calls for millions of dozens; wine clarifier use about ten millions every year. The demand from these sources are increasing annually. Great is hen fruit. Couldn't get along without the hen.

BLACK MINORCA.

The beginner who starts with "eggs for hatching," has an opportunity to commence an interesting study of the breed at once. If he is an observing student he will soon note the difference in the feathering of the sexes. He can study the plumage and points as they develop.

My incubator chicks are outgrowing the hen-hatched ones. Both kinds hatched the same day, have had the same care and feed, fed the same time, treated exactly alike, same sized runs and all. The incubator chicks have a brooder mother—but there is a very noticeable difference in growth in favor of the artificially hatched specimens.

When the hens get in the onion bed and take a dust bath it is a pretty sure sign they haven't got a proper dust bath available. Don't blame the hens, they are only teaching you the kind of a place they would like to have. Better take the hint and attend to it.

Keep a supply of small grit accessible to the brooder chicks. Give them fresh water several times a day. Make them scratch in dry litter for a portion of their food after they are a week old. If you have a supply of clean, dry sand, put it in the brooder yard, three inches deep, and mix millet seed and small cracked corn with it. Exercise in fresh air and sunshine are health promoters for young chicks.

The rough handling of eggs shipped by express makes many a man say things unfit for publication. They want you to guarantee charges when you ship eggs. You could guarantee that their charges will be too much. They charge high rates "at owner's risk of breakage," for they know how rough they will be handled by their men.

A frisky pullet was set on some valuable eggs. The first egg pipped she crushed. The incubator was started and in an hour the heat was up to 103 degrees. Result, ten chicks hatched and saved from twelve eggs. This plan is invaluable where one has costly eggs, even if they are set under a steady hen. The chicks will come out in the incubator strong and no danger of head lice. The fact is, the man who has an incubator will always find uses for it.

Artificial brooders are better than the hens. The trouble is in the management of the brooders. In many instances the heat is too great, and the brooders are not thoroughly aired as often as they should be. They should be opened and the hover lifted out three times a day if only for a minute or so each time. Don't be afraid of fresh air. The chicks are clothed with a warm coat of down that will withstand a pretty cool spring breeze. Note the hen that is cooped outside with a brood and see how the four-day old chirpers will frisk around in the chilly winds, and don't seem to mind it. Brooder chicks should be accustomed to fresh air. Air and sunshine are health food for the chirpers.

Don't forget to furnish the mother hen with a supply of corn every night. Some of the hens will not get enough food if they have only the chick rations. Some hens unless they are provided with corn don't hesitate to "gobble" the chicks' share. Use judgment in every branch of chicken culture.

The general poultry fraternity do not fully appreciate the value of the poultry press or the poultry shows. The exhibitions are educational to poultrymen as well as the general public; the poultry press furnishes official records and kindred news of interest and value. Through these mediums are converts made to the fanciers' ranks. There can be no "pure food" produced that can equal poultry and eggs, where the flocks are kept in sanitary surroundings and fed with a varied diet of wholesome food, such as the real fancier provides.

An exchange says "any argument for pure bred stock of any kind is an argument for pure bred poultry." It can also be said no other stock will give as quick or as much profit as poultry. A business must be made of poultry raising, same as other callings, if the best success is to be attained. As a side track affair there will be the usual side track results.

The waterfowl industry in this country in the past few years has made wonderful strides, and there has been marked improvement in the quality. The grand Pekin Ducks of the present day contrast with the early importations. The Rouen, a very excellent variety, has been nearly replaced by the Pekin, and it is a question whether the Rouen if given the same chance and care would not be a pretty strong rival of the Pekin—but then, you know there are the dark pin feathers, and that settles the matter when you talk about marketing ducklings.

Sitting hens have been a premium so far this spring in many sections of the country. A customer in Virginia writes: "I've been gunning over the country for sitting hens, and secured six, and by the time you ship the eggs, guess they will be settled down." There is a hint in this of value to some. Have your setting hen settled and ready when you order valuable eggs. These conditions can not be forced. The setting hen has her own ideas about time, opportunity, and convenience, and if convinced against her will does not stay conquered.

If you have a child that loves pets, encourage it. Get the boy a pair of Bantams or a pair of Plymouth Rocks, if he is old enough to think of the commercial side. Ownership swells a boy's heart with pride, and is often a source of early development of business traits. When you give him the fowls make it a genuine gift. Don't do as the farmer did, give his boy a calf in the fall, and then after the boy's winter care of it sell it in the spring, never giving the boy the money. That is worse than highway robbery.

It is now the season when the village neighbors who are over feeding their hens are getting double yolked eggs. They take them to the town editor, who boils and eats the eggs, and tells in his paper how the hen of Bill Browne's has "laid an enormous egg. Who can beat it?" After it is boiled, too.

PRACTICAL POINTERS

Fresh water and shade is a great thing during the hot weather.

Begin to chase the lice and keep after them hot and heavy until winter comes.

Remember that grit is the teeth of the hen, and that they must have plenty of grit all the time.

Those who send their poultry to market in poor flesh seldom if ever receive a profitable return from them.

Not in the history of the poultry business has stock sold so well nor for such high prices as the past season.

If you will care for the hens and feed the young chicks well they will pay the grocery bill during the fall and winter.

Never overfeed the laying hens. It is better to underfeed than overfeed the breeding stock. Fat poultry are never productive.

Be kind to the broody hens during the hot weather. It is natural for them to become broody at this season of the year, and they should not be treated harshly.

Less corn and more meat with plenty of wheat and hulled oats would produce more eggs during the winter months. Entirely too much corn is fed to the laying hens.

Do not keep too many young chicks in the same lot. When they are kept with hens colonize them off in the fence corners, or if grown in brooders follow the same rule.

To succed with poultry you must never neglect them. The only way to gain a profit in any business is to pay strict attention to the care of it. This applies more to poultry than to any other business.

Grain, greens, grit and meat are the finest rations for laying hens. These they must have both summer and winter. The more of the meat and the greens they get within a certain limit, the more they will produce.

The demand for turkey eggs was never so large nor the prices obtained so high as the past season. We imagine there will never be enough turkeys grown in the future to satisfy the palate of the American citizen.

During hot weather it is well to make the hen's nests either of sand or dry earth. This is cool and almost germ proof. The same plan may be folowed during the cold weather by putting some hay or straw on top of the earth or sand.

The best way to succeed with market poultry is to have some good quality of standard bred fowls. Raise as many of these as you can each year. Sell all but a few of the best ones for market poultry, and keep the fine ones for exhibition and the eggs for hatching.

The most important feature for the future welfare of the young chick is the proper care for the first three or four weeks. The mother hen always looks after this herself if allowed to do so, but where the chicks are grown in a brooder you must pay special attention to the degree of heat so as to have them neither too hot or to let them become chilled during the nights. All of this must have close attention if you wish to have the best results.

In Italy they have established a market for shipping eggs in air-tight vessels. The whites and yolks are separated and packed from one hundred to three hundred of each in air-tight glass vessels, and sold to the bakers. While these can be transported about the city as butter and eggs are with us, they can not be shipped, and the writer who furnishes this information states that nothing but fresh eggs can be used. The plan is for the preservation of broken or cracked eggs that could not be used in any other way.

ODDS & ENDS

Mr. Harry Dickinson, of Jefferson, N. J., possesses a four legged chicken. The photograph of this little chick shows two legs marching forward, two marching backward. We imagine that it will be very hard to tell whether this chick is going or coming. The photographs of the chick show most perfect leg development.

We can not help but admire the good taste of the editor of the Poultry Advocate, London, Ontario, who copies the full report in the American Fancier of the Pittsburg meeting. The editor seems to recognize a good thing when he sees it, and we congratulate him upon having an excellent poultry paper.

Mr. Brower, of New Jersey, says that he is ready to stake his reputation on the fact that he owned a hen, to within a few weeks ago, that died at the age of fourteen years. The hen was of the Plymouth Rock variety, and Mr. Brower has kept a record of her work in the last twelve years. She was a great layer in early days, but of late years declined to produce any eggs, but raised one or two broods of chicks each year. He states that his estimate of the hens value is a credit of many hundred eggs and thirty broods of chicks.

John M. Sontag, of St. Charles, Ill., proprietor of the Perpetual Hen Incubator Co. business, has sold the entire business, including all its rights, patent and good will, and agencies to Robt. N. Oliphant, of Trenton, N. J. The ad. of the Perpetual Hen Incubator Co. on the back cover page of this issue bears the old address of St. Charles, Ill., and for the next 30 days all inquiries, orders or letters sent to St. Charles will receive prompt and careful attention. In the meantime the business of manufacturing the Perpetual Hen Incubator and Brooders will be moved to Trenton, N. J.

LIGHT BRAHMA.

Mr. Oliphant, the new owner, is a man of experience in incubator manufacturing, possessed of ample means, energetic and enterprising, and will still further enlarge and broaden the scope of his already successful business. Many of our readers have watched with interest the rise of Mr. Sontag and the success that has come to him through years of experience with poultry and hard work in the inventing and perfecting of his machines that have proved so great a success in all parts of the country. Mr. Sontag now retires with the satisfaction of having well and faithfully performed his work, and on this splendid foundation Mr. Oliphant now takes the business, and will carry it on to still further success, enlarging and improving the business in every way that intelligent work, ample capital, persistent and liberal advertising will accomplish, and we welcome the new proprietor into the ranks of incubator manufacturers.

Spratt's Patent (America) Limited are in the midst of the Dog Show season and are consequently very busy. In addition to having penned the Westminster Kennel Club and Pittsburg shows and benching and feeding the Rochester Dog Show, they have also contracted to do the same work at Chicago, Brooklyn, Boston Collie Club, Atlantic City and one or two others in rapid succession.

CANADA

The many friends of Mr. H. B. Donovan, editor Canadian Poultry Review, Toronto, will regret to hear of the death of his father, which occurred at Brooklyn, N. Y. Especially will his kindly face be missed by those who have had the pleasure of meeting with him at the Toronto exhibition of the past ten years, where he was always in attendance, looking after the interests of The Review. Always of a genial disposition, his friends were legions.

The Dominion Government has made an appropriation of $50,000.00 to assist the management in holding a Dominion exhibition at New Westminster, B. C., September 27 to October 7, with a prize list aggregating $35,000.00. It is to be hoped that the poultry department will have a good classification and liberal premiums.

A somewhat novel idea has been launched by the Guelph Poultry Association. It is their intention to hold a show this fall at which they contemplate offering some fourteen cups and medals for competition amongst its members, all birds competing to be raised by members of the association who are in good standing May 1 next. A good show is expected as they have a large membership. Several importations of eggs have already arrived from England for some of the more enthusiastic members and it is expected the competition will be keen.

A new poultry association was recently formed at Beauford, Ontario. Fifty members were enrolled the first night, the majority of them being new fanciers. Mr. J. H. Minchall, of Minorca fame, is the president.

His many friends in Canada were grieved to learn of the death of John L. Cost, Hagerstown, Md.

Canadian National Exhibition.

Toronto, Aug. 26th to Sept. 11th.

Birds will go in on Friday, September 1st, as last year, the judging to be done on Saturday forenoon, when everybody but the judges will be excluded from the building. Large cards will be put up around the building stating that birds positively must not be handled except by the owners. An addition to the prize money was made in classes where the entries numbered twenty-one or over, prizes being as follows: First, $4; second, $3; third, $2; fourth, $1; fifth, 75c.; sixth, 50c.

The following classes were added: Rhode Island Reds, single and rose combs competing together; Rose Comb Black Minorcas; Black Japanese Bantams; Brahma Bantams, light or dark; Golden unbearded Polands. Cochins will have two medals, one for buffs and one for any other color. Rose Comb Leghorns will also have two, one for white and one for Brown.

Dr. A. W. Bell reported that he had been working on the special prize list, and had been promised cups from almost every specialty club in America.

In dressed poultry, chickens and ducks will be exhibited in pairs and not singly, but turkeys and geese will remain single, as heretofore.

A class for Call Ducks was added, white or gray. In cage birds, Lancashire Coppies and German singers were added to the canaries.

It was decided that pigeons could be entered in one class only. Some exhibitors took advantage of the entry form last year, and entered in both old and young classes, which was not the intention of the schedule. In Antwerps, long or medium face, the words, "silver or silver un," were cut out allowing all colors to compete. An additional class was added for Bald-head Tumblers which will in future read "black and any other color." Both sexes have been shown in the Swallow class; in future they will be separated.

A. F. Pierce, Winchester, N. H.—Games and Game Bantams. R. Oke, London, Ont.—Orpingtons, Brahmas, Langshans, Cochins, except Partridge. G. H. Burgott, Lawtons, N. Y.—All Leghorns. Jos. Bennett, Toronto.—All Plymouth Rocks. S. Butterfield, Windsor.—Partridge Cochins, ornamental Bantams, Dorkings and Hamburgs. J. Drevenstedt, Johnstown, N. Y.—Wyandottes, Javas and Rhode Island Reds. Geo. H. Northup, Raceville, N. Y.—Spanish, Andalusians, and Minorcas. L. G. Jarvis, Montreal.—Polands, Waterfowl, French, Silkies, Sultans, A. O. V. Turkeys. W. Tregwin.—Pet stock. W. Barber, Toronto.—Dressed poultry. Dr. Boultbee.—Canaries and cage birds. Pigeons — Messrs. Tregwin, Wagner, Scott, Cap. Barker, and Mr. J. K. Muir (Chicago).

THE FANCY

The Wisconsin Feathered Stock Association will hold its annual show January 22 to 28, 1906. The judges will be W. S. Russell, Ottomwa, Iowa, and G. D. Holden, Owatonna, Minnesota.

The Wyomissing Poultry Association of Mohmsville, Pa., was recently organized with about fifty members. The following officers were elected: President, J. G. Werner, vice-president, J. H. Fichthom, treasurer, A. O. Fisher, and secretary, Geo. W. Hatt, Mohmsville, Pa. The association has decided to hold its first show from December 19 to 23, 1905.

The Cincinnati Poultry and Pet Stock Association will hold its next annual exhibition at the Music Hall, Cincinnati, Ohio, January 16 to 20, 1906. The association are perfecting plans to make it take rank with the "Big shows" of the country. The association wants the American Poultry Association to hold their meeting in Cincinnati on the dates of its next show and have sent a formal invitation to the President and Secretary to be submitted to the executive committee for consideration.

The International Rose Comb Black Minorca Club was organized at the recent Boston Poultry Show to advance the interests of Rose Comb Black Minorca breeders who will breed creditable stock of that variety, and to discourage everything which would tend to place the Rose Comb Black Minorcas in disfavor. By thus uniting in a club, breeders can be of great assistance to each other, and by co-operation raise the already high standard of this grand variety, breed better Minorcas, and can, by being a member of the club, command much higher prices than most breeders are now receiving for them.

The Hamburg Fanciers' Club which was started about two years ago desires to gather into its membership all breeders of any variety of Hamburgs, and stimulate a larger exhibition at our shows of these beautiful birds, and create a wider interest among those who might be encouraged to breed them. No bird affords more pleasure to the scientific fancier who desires to breed to the Standard of Perfection, exhibits more grace and beauty in the poultry yard or on the lawn, or lays more eggs of such delicious flavor. They are entitled to a larger measure of popular favor.

The Washington Lewis and Clark Fair Commission have appointed Harry H. Collier superintendent and to get up a poultry exhibit for the big fair at Portland. The commission will pay the express charges on the birds exhibited at Portland and it is expected that the chicken men will show all their best fowls.

If you are interested in Rose Comb Brown Leghorns send for the annual club catalogue and membership blanks to Fred Alger, Secretary of the Rose Comb Brown Leghorn Club, Waukau, Wis.

The Western Connecticut Poultry Association will hold its next annual exhibition at Danbury, Conn., November 29, 30, December 1, 2, 1905. The association is fortunate in owning all the coops and fittings for the show room.

I would like to announce through your paper my address, and as secretary of the National Bantam Association invite all who are interested in breeding and showing bantams to write me in regard to the object of our Association. I will deem it a privilege to reply to any who may feel inclined to join with us in advancing bantams. George L. Young, 349 11th St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

All to Be Congratulated.

We are advised from reliable sources that Mr. George E. Howard, editor of The Feather, purchased during the Boston Show a one-half interest in The American Fancier, of Johnstown, N. Y., and that Mr. John Drevenstedt, who has so ably handled the editorial conduct of the same for so many years will, under the new management and arrangement, still continue in the same capacity. We learn further that Mr. T. F. McGrew, who has been since our first remembrance, one of the solid men of the poultry industry, there being no person connected therewith who is better or more favorably known, is to be one in what will be a strong and successful trio; namely, Howard-Drevenstedt-Mc-Grew. This trio will hereafter have the making of The Feather and The American Fancier. Success will surely come to such a combination as these three men together make.

Poultry Success joins with the many friends of Messrs. Howard, Drevenstedt and McGrew in wishing them unbounded success.—Poultry Success.

Mr. Howard, publisher of the FEATHER, Washington, D. C., has engaged Mr. T. F. McGrew, who will devote his entire time to Mr. Howard's interests. He has also purchased one-half interest in the American Fancier, Drevy's paper, and in the future it will be printed and mailed from Washington, D. C. We wish to congratulate Mr. Drevenstedt and Mr. Howard on this arrangement, for we are sure it will do much to help this valuable paper to become more valuable. Mr. Howard is proprietor of a large printing establishment in Washington and will look after the publishing, while Mr. Drevenstedt will continue in the same capacity as editor at his home, Johnstown, N. Y.

You will note the cut above. It has real worth and merit, and is not only useful, but an actual necessity and for which there is good demand. The poultry business is not going to become, but has already become one of the greatest industries in the land. I have an invention that is abreast of the times. It saves time, and work, and waste of feed in poultry raising. It is a device that all poultry raisers need, can use and will want if once seen.

NOTES FROM ENGLAND

By John Wharton

We are now in the middle of April, and oh, what wretched weather! It has been said that an American once remarked that we in England only got "samples" of weather. I am sure he might have been further wrong. A fortnight ago we thought spring had come; birds were busy nesting, and many nests were to be seen with eggs, but now on the 19th of April all is covered with snow, and it is as cold as Christmas. This return of winter is very grievous to all classes, as well as to the chicken growers. In the south of England the lambing season is over, but in the neighborhood where I live, and where the hardy mountain sheep are raised by the thousands, the shepherds are having a hard time of it, out all night attending to the newly dropped lambs. The fruit trees, too, will suffer. To many the worst of all is that Easter is upon us when many take their holiday, the only one many can have during the year, and the cold is not much like tempting one to the seaside or even away from the fireside.

However, amongst it all I hear good reports of the chicken season from many quarters, and no doubt when the chicken shows come around we shall see well filled classes as of yore. Bye the bye, what can't be done when we try? A few years ago had we talked about January and February chicks we should have been taughed at and told it was impossible, but now we see them year by year proving the fact that the true fancier can accomplish wonderful things when he tries.

One of the worst results of the cold spell is the fact that natural food being scarce for such vermin as rooks, jackdaws, magpies, etc., makes them turn their attention to spring chicks. Let them once take off one and so surely will they return for number two and so on. Some fourteen days since they visited my rearing field and killed one. I immediately put on a lad to watch. They turned from mine and went to a neighboring fancier's and took off thirteen in two hours. Since then the gun has been fired at every opportunity and we have lost none since.

Food stuffs are rising just now, as they generally do in the spring, and it may be of interest to quote the prices I am paying for food. All corn meals, etc., are sold by stone of 14 pounds. Wheat costs 25 cents, oats 24 cents, maize 19 cents for the round and 18 cents for the large, maize meal 21 cents, and other feeds accordingly. At this time of year eggs are at their lowest, and in our markets you can get 18 fine eggs for 24 cents, our English shilling. Butter, too, is at its lowest, making 18 cents per pound of 16 ounces.

The general fanciers that I saw in your country have the advantage over us in the fact that they can grow a certain quantity, if not all, their food, whereas in England we have to purchase every pound. When I kept poultry solely from a utility point, I reckoned on a profit of a little over one dollar per hen, after allowing for everything, and had I been better centered for a market I could have made it higher.

What a magnificent paper The Feather is, to be sure. With such a journal before you month after month the dullest fancier ought soon to blossom into a successful one. As I read the last copy I was led to say, "Of all hobbies is there one more ready to impart knowledge one to another like the poultry fancy?" Yes, knowledge often obtained by hard work and plodding toil, and yet readily given to the world. Well do I remember my young days when I had the hen fever, and having no one to go to from whom I could get advice, and meeting one day one of England's best fanciers, Mr. Henry Digby, known the world over as an Aylesbury Duck fancier, he gave me tips how to become a successful fancier, tips which I have acted upon, and which I look upon as the foundation of my success. Poor Digby has left this mortal coil, but there is one at least who will never forget his cheery smile and readiness to help a young fancier.

What changes have taken place in the fancy during the last ten years! The old hands; where are they? Many of them have gone, and we miss them greatly as the prominent shows come around. In fact, a new generation has arisen, and this is one reason why we should continually advertise and not drop it, thinking that we are well enough known to be able to withdraw it. This brings me to the question, Who are successful advertisers and fanciers? My answer to the first question is, he who continually keeps his name to the front and is able when he has an order to send something out just a trifle better than his customer expects, this will bring further orders from the same customer or some to whom he has recommended you. To the second question, Who are the most successful fanciers? I unhesitatingly say he or she who specializes one breed. When I was in your country I found the most successful ones amongst those who kept to one or at most three varieties. Of course there are exceptions, but they are few and far between.

BROWN LEGHORN MALE.

In The Feather I noticed some remarks on gapes. This is one of the ailments that chickens are liable to, sometimes more in one particular part of the country than another. Talking to a poultryman from Ireland, at the last Dairy Show, he told me how, in his neighborhood, nearly every chick was subject to it, whilst in the part where I live we very rarely see a solitary case, and I have never been troubled with it on my farm. I have a friend, a Silver Laced Wyandotte breeder, who was very successful, breeding many Crystal Palace and other winners, but three years ago he moved on a large farm, part of which was arable and part grass. His breeding on this farm has been a miserable failure, for no sooner than the chicks are three weeks old they are attacked by the gapes and their size is stunted even if they live. I can offer no remedy, having never had any experience, but if I landed on such a farm I would clear off to pastures new.

During the last six weeks we have lost by death two prominent fanciers, viz., Miss Croad and Mr. Geo. Hall. To Miss Croad belongs the honor of introducing into England the Langshan. Brought over to England from China by Major Croad, her brother, in 1872, she has kept them until her death. No lady fancier was better known by name, because she has carried on a constant defense in their behalf, her evident desire being to keep them as near like the original as possible, and terming any improvement on the breed a cross and lacking purity, etc. The result has been two clubs for the Langshans, one known as the Croad Club and the other as the Langshan Club. Both issued a standard, but so different that the wasters from the modern Langshan could win in the Croad classes. The result of it all has been that the variety has suffered, and to quote the words of a letter I had from a prominent breeder last week, "the sale of Langshans is wretched." It won't pay to quarrel over a breed if we want it to be popular.

Mr. Geo. Hall was a well known judge of the old stamp, one who had spent the best part of his life in the fancy and could pass an opinion on almost anything wearing feathers or fur. He will be missed, and his place will be hard to fill. Of course there will be many ready to offer to fill his place, but will they be efficient, that's the point. I am sorry to think there is a down grade in the judging fraternity, more especially in the readiness to go for a fee that will barely cover railroad expenses. Can those men afford to do it honestly at this price? I guess not! Let the judges be paid, paid honestly, then we shall have nothing to complain about in their honesty. Of course they will be liable to err, but he is a poor fancier who won't forgive a pure error of judgment. I have often said every fancier should be a judge once. Many wouldn't be one the second time for love nor money, and altogether I think it would bring out a little sympathy for judges in general, who, I am convinced, ninety-eight cases out of a hundred, wish to find the best and give them awards accordingly.

I have just received from the Partridge Wyandotte Club of America, four ribbons to be competed for at our next club show, one for the best colored male, one for the best shaped male, and ditto female. I am delighted to receive them, as it shows the brotherly feeling that exists between the fanciers of the two countries. Truly one touch of nature makes the whole world kin. I am sure if some of your leading fanciers would come over to our English shows we would give them a welcome. I hope ere long to visit your New York and Boston shows and see and be seen. No doubt a large trade is carried on between the two countries, but I am convinced a larger could be done if we knew each other better. Now, come over with a team of Rocks and White Wyandottes and have a happy time and take back a few dollars to your credit.

A great feature of our advertising columns at this time of year, is the trade that is done in "Live Chicks." They are offered at all prices, from a dollar a dozen upward. They are sent off as soon as dry from the incubator, packed in light boxes, and at this age they are said to travel to any part of the British Isles in perfect safety. Some establishments keep up to fifty incubators running, so great is the demand, and I am told it is a very profitable business. Many of these hatching establishments are run by ladies. Personally, they are welcome to the business, as the egg trade is bad enough without starting to sell chickens. Some customers are so difficult to please. True, I seldom receive an insulting letter, but to receive one egg with an intimation to replace same, and that they have eleven strong healthy chickens, is enough to make you return the same egg and let them have another trial at it. Of course, the nice courteous letters outweigh the above, and still you go on. It is curious to note how certain districts are the homes of certain breeds, just as the Rhode Island Red is located in Rhode Island. In Scotland the Hamburg finds its home, although the Wyandotte comes a good second. The second home of Hamburgs, or I think I should say "the home," is around Erby in Yorkshire, where the "Hamburg King," Harry Pickles, lived and recently ended his days. The Plymouth Rock is bred more in Lancashire than in any other country. Partridge Wyandottes are here, there and everywhere, but most in Yorkshire, Kent and Leicestershire. Orpingtons are strong in Kent, Lancashire and Lincolnshire. Silver laced Wyandottes find their center in Cumberland and Northumberland. The fact is, wherever a successful fancier of a breed lives others take to the same breed, and thus it is found in quantity in that particular neighborhood.

Schedules are fast coming to hand, and many good shows will soon be upon us. I hear that a new role will be tried at the Royal Lancashire, viz.. a new label for pens. It is a label for pens, which is three labels one on another. You pen, say, in pen 19, then when all is ready for judging this number is torn off and behold the judging number, say 1240, appears, and it is judged by this, then, after judging, this is in turn torn off and 19 appears again. We are told that this is to stop any plotting between judge and exhibitor as to awards. I was not aware there were such rogues in the fancy, and if there is I am sure this won't stop it. "Where there's a will there's some other way." We see dog, horse, cattle and sheep exhibitors parading their own exhibits, and I am inclined to think we are as honest as they.

The Best Results.

No one can tell in advance who will or who will not succeed with poultry. Here and there great success crops out in unexpected places, and on the other hand failures come when least looked for. This is the natural outcome of the possession of ability, joined with the much needed experience to carry on the cultivation of poultry for profit. Best results always follow in the footsteps of experience. It is quite as necessary, however, to have the ability to make use of the experience as to have the experience.

The Breeding of Sebright Bantams.

Sir John Sebright, who, after years of careful breeding and experimenting, gave to the fancy the Sebright Bantam, scarcely realized the popularity they were destined to achieve, or the delight they would be to the enthusiastic fancier of the twentieth century. Other varieties are bred to a greater extent, even in the bantam classes, but no breed excites the admiration of all who see them as does the Sebright Bantams.

They are bred largely, but may I ask how many are good ones? When we breed for one point we are apt to lose sight of something else. Among the prominent defects in Sebrights of the present time I would mention a long back and drooping breast. With these two grave faults the proud carriage is decidedly spoiled. Another thing the breeders of these varieties are rapidly losing is the true color of the Golden. There are so few Golden's of a correct tint that some breeders are totally in ignorance of the standard shade of the Golden Sebright. Consequently, many are breeding them of a dull, dark, brownish color instead of the rich, golden brown that is so essential. A perfect comb, clear wings and tail are very important points in the make-up of a first-class Sebright Bantam, but do not breed for these at the cost of everything else. Color, lacing, shape and style are just as important.

Another thing we are apt to carry too far in our enthusiasm is breeding for narrow lacing. Narrow, yet clear, well defined lacing is greatly admired, but should it be too narrow you lose all the beauty of the plumage. If possible, handle some of the birds in the show rooms, and you will find a majority of them with the feathers slightly tipped with black, instead of the lacing extending clear around the web of the feather. This is a serious mistake, and shows that this idea is already being carried too far.

My advice to the prospective Sebright Bantam fancier would be as follows: You must have a love for the business and success is half attained. Devote your time to your stock because you love them and consider the time spent with your pets the happiest hours of the day. Remember you are choosing the most beautiful fowl in all poultrydom, a bird that requires perfection from the spur of his comb to the tips of his toes, and consequently the hardest to breed. Start with dollars and cents as your goal and you will achieve nothing. Buy good stock of a reliable breeder and seek to improve your strain year after year. If you breed good ones you can find a ready sale for all your surplus stock.

It is remarkable the popularity our friends, the Bantams, are fast attaining. The fancy is rapidly extending from one end of the country to the other. Great credit should be given to the clubs and associations formed for their advancement.

In conclusion, I would say, get into the fancy; select two or three of the many beautiful varieties; join the clubs and let us all strive for bantams of a superior quality and more of them.—John L. Bryant.

One can begin the keeping of poultry with less capital than with other live stock. It brings quick returns that enable you to increase the business within your own resources. Care and attention aids the grower to add to his flock each year, and to improve the quality by selection and close culling of the poorer quality for market.

The First Dorkings in America.

I visited England in 1841, and in looking over the poultry there, the Dorking struck me as being the shorthorn of barn-door fowls; that is, the best for general purposes, and I resolved to take some of them back to America with me. I accordingly selected two cocks and half a dozen pullets and got them safely to my farm in the State of New York. They were of brilliant variagated plumage, colors of the darker shades, and the cocks black breasted. They had rather short white legs, five toes, and both single and double combs. The bodies were pheasant-shaped, long, round and full, with deep breast like a shorthorn ox. The head was fine and well set on a small, clean, graceful neck; they were thickly feathered, hardy, and thrifty; excellent layers, steady sitters, and careful nurses. Well fatted, the hens weighed six to seven pounds each, the cocks nine to ten pounds; when caponized they came up to twelve pounds. They were the best table fowls I ever ate. They had white skins and flesh, with little offal.

So far as I have been able to ascertain I was the first importer of the Dorking fowl into America. Subsequently, many other importations followed. Some of these were of larger size than mine, but possessed the same characteristics. They varied in plumage from light or silver to spangled, and almost black. Pure white Dorkings were also imported, but instead of being small like Bantams, they were nearly as large as the colored, but not quite as hardy. I never saw any with yellow legs or a yellow tinge on the hackle. The plumage was pure clean white, and the skin and flesh also white, and they were in fact, very handsome birds.

I wish this superb breed of fowls could be revived in England as I first saw them, and then kept clear of all outside crosses. A cross from Dorking cocks can improve many other breeds of poultry, but no other cocks crossed on Dorking hens can improve their progeny in my opinion. At least such crosses as I have seen on this side of the water has been lamentable failures.—A. B. Allen.

To Break Up the Sitters.

During the summer season everyone is anxious to have some simple method by which they can prevent the hens from being broody when not needed for hatching. Many plans are recommended. There is none so good as to have a small enclosure covered with grass, with no house or box at all within the enclosure. Turn the sitting hens into this, and feed them lightly on oats and wheat. Furnish plenty of water and grit, and they will soon forget their broody inclination. As soon as they are over their desire to sit they can be turned back to the breeding pens again with perfect safety.

Where you have not the room for this yard, build a square box about three feet square, out of lathes, with openings from one inch to one and one-half between each lath. Hang this up in the barn or in some out of the way place. Provide a water dish and feed cup hanging to the outside. Put them in this open box which has no solid floor and it will turn their attention from the brooding inclination.

Some people say if you tie a red rag to a hen's tail and turn her out she will run off the brooding inclination by herself. Or if you dip her continually into a barrel of cold water you will frighten it away. Both of these are cruel to the extreme, and no one should ever think of using such wicked processes.

What and How to Feed.

Some time ago the Poultry Herald published a warning about feeding beef scraps, which poultrymen generally should know. The writer of the article advises, when purchasing meat scraps from the butcher, to ascertain, if possible, just how they were made. At times a good deal of salt is used in the scraps before the tallow is taken from them. This is done to keep the scraps until they are ready to take the tallow from them. Consequently the scraps, when the tallow has been removed from them, are very salty and, if fed directly to the young birds, will be fatal. "I have just had a case of this," says the writer, "and as a result thirty-two young and promising birds are buried. These birds, after they had eaten heartily of the scraps, drank a considerable amount of water, which goes to show that something was wrong."

As warm weather approaches, cut down the quantity of fattening food in the ration.

While green bone is one of the best, if not the best egg foods, it must be judiciously fed. Too much will produce bowel troubles and worms.

The enthusiast is apt to pay strict attention to the bill of fare during the winter, when the price of eggs is high, and neglect it during the summer when the price drops. Such work, however, brings bad results.

Potatoes, turnips, or any kind of roots, cut up in a root cutter so they are fine, and given in a raw state, are excellent for a noon meal. Another good way to feed turnips or beets is to cut them in half and let the fowls pick them to pieces.

Salt is acknowledged as beneficial to poultry if fed sparingly in the mash. It is necessary for the purpose of forming gastric juice. But if given to excess it is apt to produce inflammation of the mucous membrane.

It is a noted fact that the English poulterers produce birds of larger bone and frame than we do, the reason for which pobably is because they feed but little Indian corn, and more bone and muscle food like oats, wheat and other grains which are rich in these qualities.

Cowpeas is a low cost food, and excellent for the bill of fare of laying hens. They should be boiled until nearly done, and then fed, for best results.

Both in making up a bill of fare, and in giving it, judgment must be used. Hens, like human beings, are about alike constituted when it goes to the matter of food and feeding. Some will crave a certain article while others will not touch it; some food will agree with some hens and disagree with others; some hens will need more food than others. This is a subject that requires careful watching.

If beginners would generally recognize the fact that well-fed poultry does not mean over-fed, they would have better results. The advice is often given, allow the fowls all they will eat up clean. The advice is good as far as it goes, but there shoud be a proviso in that advice—providing the food is of such a nature to further the ends desired. Study the character of the food given and feed accordingly.

Laying hens require more food than those not laying, but it must be remembered that it is not so much what a hen eats as what she is able to digest and assimilate that counts for the production of both eggs and meat.

In feeding young growing stock it is well to give a little green bone, selecting the finest particles for the smallest chicks. Green bone is a preventive of leg weakness, which is generally due to a lack of mineral matter in the bones of the chicks. Oat meal, or the kernel of the oat, contain a large amount of muscle-forming element, and should compose a liberal part of their ration.

It is estimated that a hen will drink, during hot weather, at least a half-pint of water a day, and as an egg is more than three-quarters water, it is easily seen how imperative it is that the supply is never allowed to run out.

When oats are fed, the supply of good hard sharp grit must not fail, so that the fowl can cut the shocks in the crop, which are very tough and unyielding.

About six years ago our associate, Geo. O. Brown predicted that alfalfa was destined to become one of the leading crops for poultry pasture, and Mr. Brown's prediction has come true. Its wonderful recuperative powers proved to be just the plant for the purpose. It can be cut several times during a season for hay making. Poultry can be turned on it, and when it has been eaten down pretty close they may be removed and the alfalfa will soon be growing again with its usual vigor. This may be repeated the entire season.

AILMENTS AND REMEDIES.

Adopt sanitary rules, and see that they are enforced.

An ailing fowl should be fed soft food, rich and nutritious, and never whole grain.

A good ointment for fowls suffering with colds in the head is to make an ointment composed of lard and kerosene, which rub on the throat, face and top of the head. At the same time give the bird a one-grain quinine pill. Repeat the treatment each night for three nights in succession.

When a fowl acts dumpish and shows no particular signs of disease, a liver pill given at night will generally right the trouble, which generally is a sluggish liver.

For gapes in chicks we know of nothing better than a piece of gum camphor about the size of a grain of wheat. Repeat the dose two or three times until the chick is free of the trouble.

English poultrymen claim that onions are a sovereign remedy for gapes in chicks, as worms will not live where the scent of onions abounds.

For sour crop in chicks, a half teaspoonful of tincture of nux vomica in a quart of drinking water is recommended. Allow no other drink. Supply plenty of green food, grit and granulated charcoal.

Seasonable Suggestions.

Those who keep ducks will find it to great advantage now to move the houses to another location and plow up the old runs and sow to some green crop, like rye. This will not only disinfect the runs but it will grow a crop much relished by the ducks. Where it is not practical to move the houses and runs, provision should be made for alternate runs, so that the vacated ones can be sown as above. Ducks kept on the same ground year after year, will suffer, and the offspring will not be strong and vigorous. This advice refers particularly to ducks kept exclusively on land, where there is no bathing water.

May is a good building month, and now is an excellent time to erect houses to quarter the coming young stock that it is intended to keep over. It is generally the case on a poultry farm, even on those well established, that each year it becomes necessary to overcrowd. This overcrowding breeds vices, the greatest of which are feather pulling. There is nothing more disgusting and ruinous to the flocks, and when once started it is remarkable how quickly the entire lot are taught the habit. Therefore, if it is at all possible, get to building now so that the work may be done before the hot weather, and the buildings ready for the young stock when they are ready for them.

We believe that many failures are caused among beginners by never being ready. Hens are set and the hatch due before an attempt has been made to provide shelter for the young; the stock is increased beyond the capacity of the houses in the hope that additional quarters will be erected in time, but they are not. We know one poultryman who each year hopes he will be better fixed for his stock, but who each year finds himself handicapped the same way. There is no trouble to be ready for all these emergencies when a man makes up his mind that that will be done, and goes at once to work.

"I meant to attend to the scales on that fowl's legs when they first showed," said a poultryman to the writer, "but some how or other I never got at it. Now they are past curing."

What does such arguments show? They explain the character of the man. They show that he is of a shiftless order, always intending to do different, but never getting that far. Do such men succeed? We have never known them to. The bright, wideawake man is the one who does not wait until necessity compels him to provide, but the one who looks, plans and works ahead. He is always ready. He is never caught napping. His stock never suffer, because they are always provided for.

"I thought I had enough feed on hand to last me over Sunday," said one of these fellows to us one day, "but I found that I had to use it all in tonight's feeding, and tomorrow being Sunday the fowls must fast." He smiled as he spoke. He never believed in buying ahead, he always waited until the last was used. Would you expect such men to succeed in the poultry business? Is it a wonder that there are failures when men of that caliber take hold of the reins?

Therefore, make it a rule, and begin to enforce it on this beautiful May day, and continue obeying it the entire year, to "never put off until tomorrow what can be done today; and to always look ahead, provide ahead, and never to shirk a duty simply because of a 'tired feeling' that never does any good, but always causes harm."

May is a good month to fatten those hens that have passed their usefulness as layers (which is generally the case at two years of age), and then dress and sell as fowls. Uuless there are some traits about certain hens that it is wished to breed in the future stock, it is not advisable to hold a hen after her second laying season. She will be more profitable marketed.

Poultry prospers under bright skies, in green fields, and clean coops, if properly fed and watered. Transform their clean domicile to a filthy vermin infested pen and the other healthful conditions can not save them.

Editorial Gossip.

Speculation about the judges of the Clark-Lewis poultry display at the exposition next fall has already begun. The outsiders are beginning to select, as they did prior to the St. Louis Poultry Show, who should and who should not be the judges, and we presume the results will be the same as usual. The judges will be selected from among those whom the organization believe will give satisfaction at the least possible cost. It is amusing to those who have been within the circle to hear the demands of the management as to the qualifications of those who judge; and then, finally to discover that they have been largely selected because they could be secured at the least possible cost.

The most interesting live-stock displays in this country have been held in connection with the so-called world's fairs. The sound of the trumpet and the blast of the bugle is heard in advance. All the music at the wind-up could be made on a little tin whistle. The management usually begins the exposition in an economical manner by cutting down the expenses and the per diem of the judges so as to make it possible to have more banquets and better times; for, in this way, they are able to secure the passage of complimentary resolutions from the body of men whom they are entertaining. It is much easier to have these resolutions passed while people are in a good humor than it would be to secure them for print after the gentlemen have returned home and have had time to think.

The question of whether large fowls eat more than small ones is having some consideration. The writer himself has kept Cochins, Leghorns and Wyandottes, and he is willing to record that in his own experience it was easier to keep the Cochins in fairly good condition than it was the Leghorns on the same amount of food. At the same time if the fowls were permitted to eat all the grain they could consume the Brahmas and Cochins would eat more than the others, but in doing so they became so very fat as to be almost useless. If left to themselves the Asiatics would eat the most food, but if all varieties were kept and fed what they really needed there would not be much difference between the food consumed by any of our poultry.

From the New York Experimental Stations reports there appears to be but little difference in the consumption of food on the average per pound weight in all poultry, that is, in proportion a Brahma would not eat any more than a Bantam. We think that the ratio of food consumed by all poultry under the same conditions averages about the same according to the size; that is, a ten pound Cochin or Brahma would necessarily need more food than would a four-and-one-half-pound Leghorn.

From every viewpoint possible standard-bred poultry are more valuable and profitable than are any of the common cross-bred mongrel fowls. Each one of our standard bred varieties has some valuable qualities peculiar to itself, yet all of them are superior to any of the barnyard poultry.

When keeping fowls for the production of market poultry the infusion of new blood into the flock is of considerable importance, but it is best to select one variety of some good breed and stock. Use this breed for all purposes, and when it is necessary for a change of blood bring in some more of the same variety from a different strain, and in this way invigorate and keep up the strength of your blood lines without intermingling different breeds and varieties. This same applies to selecting stock for the renewing of blood lines for the production of eggs. It is quite necessary to renew or invigorate the lines when you desire a large egg yield or plenty of meat for market poultry. When this is the purpose you must continually bring in new blood to keep up the strength, but remember to have this of the same blood as your general flock.

When producing exhibition poultry you must line breed and interbreed to a certain extent to establish the most desirable qualities. Work for shape and color. Bring within the control of your blood lines the true type of the fowl you are breeding and endeavor to have the finest coloring and markings possible. Consequently you must line breed to a certain extent. This can be done with very little danger of undermining the strength of your stock if you will always select strong vigorous females for the producing stock, and never use either males or females that lack anything in strength and vigor.

It is not always the largest males that are the best and most desirable for breeding. Size and general constitutional make-up come more largely from the hen than from the male bird. If you will always select and keep an exceptionally good lot of hens of the very best type and of strong constitution you are likely to have but little trouble even though you breed so close that it might be termed in-breeding.

Either the Red Dorking mentioned by the early historians of Rome, or the Rose Comb White Dorking was the original Dorking. It does not seem to matter much which of these was the original. We know that the rose comb and the single comb are two distinct lines of breeding. The Rose Comb Whites do not have exactly the same shape or type as do the single combs or the other variety. The single combs are very much larger than are the Rose Comb Whites and the recent importations of the Red Dorkings have brought to notice a new variety that promises to be both attractive and valuable as market poultry and egg producers.

We have an inquiry as to the proper size for shipping coops for live poultry. Brother Atherton, who dwells in Boston, states as follows:

"Coops for shipping live fowls to market should be 48 inches long, 30 inches wide and 12 inches high for chickens and ducks, and 15 inches high for turkeys and geese. For making them use two-by-twos for corner posts or lighter lumber if you cannot get this size. Cut six pieces 30 inches long, nine pieces 12 or 15 inches long for each coop. Nail the short pieces one to each end, one in the center of the long ones. Use ten-penny nails. Make three of these frames, one for each end and the center. For the bottom use one half inch boards or laths. Use strips of laths for the sides and ends. Leave two laths loose on the top to make a door for the coop. For broilers, coops can be made ten inches high and 24 inches wide.

We presume that this is the standard size for New England and should go almost anywhere.

How many people do not seem to understand that it is the green food the poultry eats that influences the color of the yolk of the egg. When the poultry have plenty of green food the yolk is darker than it is during the winter when deprived of the green food. Cochins, white and buff, naturally lay eggs with a paler yolk than do the Brahmas and Langshans. The yolk of the Leghorn fowl is naturally lighter in color than the yolk of a Wyandotte. In fact the yolk of all the European fowls are naturally lighter in color than are the yolks of the Asiatic family. The Plymouth Rocks and Wyandottes having Asiatic blood in them cause the yolk to be naturally darker in tone, but even with all this the yolk of the Leghorn will be lighter during the winter months than when they are running the fields in summer and have all the green food they can eat.

In packing eggs for market too much care cannot be given to selecting the sizes and shapes. Small eggs, badly shaped eggs, eggs with rough shells are all graded as inferior. If any of these are packed in with your regular shipment it will reduce the value of the shipment very much indeed. It is much wiser to pick out all these inferior looking eggs and use them at home and send only the best to market. It will pay better and the ones that look bad will taste just as well at home as would the others. Uniformity of size, regularity of color and smoothness of shell of the eggs of any one case adds very much to the profit of the shipper. Put all your dark eggs in one case, all the light ones in the other. If you have not enough to fill an entire crate put the light eggs on one side and dark ones on the other.

As the time for dividing or separating your breeding stock is at hand begin to arrange for selling those you do not intend to keep. Look a little ahead, and make the best sales when the opportunity offers. Do not hesitate to sell all that you do not need whenever you have full value offered for it.

In 1883 a resolution was passed by the American Poultry Association admitting Rose Comb White and Rose Comb Brown Leghorns to compete in the show room with the Single Combs. In other words the rose combs and single combs all competed together as Leghorns of the separate varieties to which they belonged. The resolution read that the Rose Comb White and Brown Leghorns be admitted as such and the classes be designated as Single or Rose Combs and to compete together. We quote this in reply to the question that arose as to the possibility of admitting and judging the Rhode Island Reds all in one class without reference to style of comb.

Editor Ely, of the Ohio Poultry Journal, compliments the American Fancier by using its report of the Pittsburg meeting in the columns of his journal. There is no use talking, Brother Ely at times does get on to a good thing, even though he may be a little late in learning that Brother John L. Cost married a new wife and departed this country all within about thirty days.

The New York Experiment Station, What It Is and What It Does, is the title of a handsomely printed and illustrated pamphlet, giving an outline of the work done at the State Agricultural Station at Geneva, New York. Many of our readers are familiar with the excellent work done by Prof. Wheeler in the poultry investigation. The latter issued in the popular condensed bulletins have appeared in these columns in the past, and contained much boiled down practical matter. It is to be hoped that Prof. Wheeler will be allowed more time in the future to conduct his poultry experiments, than he has in the past. We need more of his kind of work and less of the theoretical and ponderous attempts that find their way in print, and which are rarely, if ever, read by practical fanciers.

What has become of the New York State Poultry Society? It has been organized, reorganized and rejuvenated a number of times, but its cause for a real practical existence this side of Mars has not been made manifest.

Manufacturing Rumpless fowls for fall shows will soon begin. The production of these tail-less beauties (?) is not a difficult task, but it is a fraud all the same.

Because an egg is fresh, is no guarantee of its quality. It may be as tasteless as a bucket of distilled water and have a yolk looking like a sick lemon. Forcing hens to lay regardless of quality of the egg product is on a par with forcing cows to yield a big flow of their milk. There is a law in the State of New York requiring a twelve per cent standard of cream on milk, and this keeps the dairymen in check. But there is nothing to check the commercially inclined poultrymen in these days of high prices for hen fruit. An egg is an egg if it's clean, of fair size and fresh. But there are some fancy markets that demand quality with freshness and the prices soar accordingly.

Cracking eggs for a living is not only the most novel but the most monotonous method of earning a living to judge by the following statement made by a correspondent in Tid-Bits:

"I met a man who said he was a biscuit manufacturer on a large scale, and was rather inclined to boast about the number of eggs—Continental eggs—which his firm bought in the course of a year. Now, it seems that to avoid calamity, five eggs are broken into a bowl at a time before being added to the common stock. There are men, he told me, who do nothing else but crack eggs. They become so expert that a man can dispose of 1,000 an hour, or 10,000 a day."

It will be noticeable in Mr. Odell's description of a Black Red Game that he assumes the color of the neck, back and wings is at fault in the Standard and substitutes the rich red in place of the lighter red or lemon, and also gives the legs a range of color from willow to white. He departs from the ideal and gives instead a bird undesirable in color with eggs of so many shades that it would be impossible to have birds match in an exhibition pen under his standard. If mongrelizing the breed is the price of its popularity, better allow it to remain under cover, breed a few, but breed right.

The whole trouble with the exhibition game is: Lack of interest in breeding and exhibiting a variety of fowl that requires not only a strong love and fancy for it, but a determination to keep it before the public regardless of pecuniary gain. It seems as if popular fowls must be inseparably connected with a bag of gold dust.

In answer to an editorial note of ours in the April Feather, relative to the Exhibition Game Fowl and its apparent decline in popularity. Mr. C. J. Odell, of Montreal, Canada, replies as follows in the May issue of the Canadian Poultry Review:

"My answer is, give the fanciers the right type of Game fowl for exhibition purposes. With the present Standard on Games the chances are the once most popular exhibition fowl will gradually continue to lose ground.

"Color—Head, comb, face and jaw a rich, bright red; eyes, large, prominent, red bay hazel; neck hackle, rich bright orange red throughout, free from stripes; back, shoulder and shoulder coverts, rich bright vermilion red; wing butts, rich lustrous black; wing bow, rich dark red, free from black feathers; wing coverts, black forming a wide steel blue bar across the wing, being even and well defined; primaries, bay outside, black inside; secondaries, clear bright bay on outside, black inside, with green spots on the end of the feathers; saddle, rich orange red; tail, rich black; sickle feathers and tail coverts, rich metallic green; breast, body and thighs, rich clear black, free from admixture of other colors; legs, willow, olive, yellow or white, color preferred in order named. A black red with the above color of plumage is without exception the handsomest of all fowls. Not only is the novelty of breeding Game fowls wearing out, but the Game classes are actually dying out also. Unless a change takes place there will be no Games to judge at our shows."

In conversation with John Blunck, of Johnstown, N. Y., a week ago, we learned that he would breed only a few large Games. He remarked: "They are not easy to raise, there is no demand for them and there is little or no money in exhibiting them at the fall and winter shows." Yet Mr. Blunck has the cream of a grand collection of Black Red, Brown Red, Duckwing and Red Pile Games left to him by his brother, A. E. Blunck. The latter was a large and successful breeder and exhibitor at the past big shows at New York and elsewhere, and even he, before selling his stock to his brother, saw the gradual decline of the interest taken in the most truly fancier's fowl extant. It was not a case of Standard color, but a case of lack of appreciation on the part of the poultry society management and the public, as well as a decided slump in the poultry press, the latter virtually ignoring Games entirely.

At a well attended and enthusiastic meeting of the Toronto Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association, held last month, it was decided to hold the annual exhibition at St. Andrew Hall, Toronto, Canada, December 29, 1905, to January 2, 1906.

The largest order for eggs from a single variety ever placed was the one given by Mr. James J. Riley, of Montreal, to Mr. John S. Martin, Port Dover, Canada. It was an order for five thousand White Wyandotte eggs for hatching. Mr. Riley is starting a large poultry farm near Montreal, and intends keeping one thousand laying hens of the White Wyandotte variety. He has been at the Guelpt College all winter, carefully studying all breeds and finally selecting the popular White Wyandottes as the best for his purpose. In purchasing eggs from Mr. Martin he made no mistake as the latter strain is one of the best in America.

In answer to several inquiries regarding the best egg preservatives, the following results at the Ontario, Canada, Station show: The two leading successful substances were lime water and water-glass solution. Eggs put in lime water scored 41 out of a possible 50, and those in water-glass in proportion of one part to seven of water, scored 43.2 out of a possible 50. The addition of salt to the lime water failed to secure as good results as the lime water alone, and greased eggs put up in salt were not equal to the others mentioned.

A good, true fancier is the same everywhere. There is nothing narrow about him. He knows no East, North, South or West. He can extend the right hand of good fellowship across the briny depths of the Atlantic Ocean to his fellow fancier on the other side and feel the reciprocating touch. That the international era of good feeling between fanciers is growing is attested by the following kindly editorial in our English contemporary Poultry:

"We are pleased to record an incident that proves the good fellowship existing between fanciers the world over, and more especially between the fanciers of England and America. The members of the Partridge Wyandotte Club of America have, through their secretary, Mr. Manley, sent to the English Partridge Wyandotte Club four special prize ribbons to be competed for at the latter club's next show. They are splendid specimens of the American ornamental prize ribbons, and stamped in gold letters with the name of the Partridge Wyandotte

D. J. LAMBERT

HEREWITH is shown a true portrait of Mr. D. J. Lambert, the well-known judge, breeder, and originator of Lambert's Death to Lice. These three qualities have made him both popular and fashionable, and he is known by the same good qualities throughout this whole land. It is "Honest Dan" from north to south and from east to west; his life work in behalf of poultry has not been misspent. His good work is the same today as it was yesterday, and we are satisfied it will be the same always.

Club of America and the nature of the award, one each being given for the best-shaped male and female, and best coloured male and female. We believe this is the first time that any American club has paid such a compliment to an English club, and the example thus set should help to bring closer together the fanciers of the two great English-speaking nations. Many people will be pleased that the prizes are offered for such points as shape and colour, which perhaps do not get full justice in this country. The awarding of the prizes will therefore attract much interest, and it should lead to more attention being given to these points. It is unfortunate that the standards of the two clubs as regards colour differ so greatly, but evidently this is no bar to a feeling of goodwill."

When officers of a specialty club are to be elected in England, the candidates are announced and mail vote is taken, all members voting their choice. This is an improvement over the annual meetings held by American specialty clubs, especially by the majority of them, where the few members in attendance run the whole affair. It gives the cliques a very good opportunity to get in their fine work, if such is necessary, and it seems, it is more often the necessity than the rank and file think it should be. Even that august body, the American Poultry Association has been badly jarred by the doubtful methods of allowing only members present to have a voice in the election of officers.

Speaking of the A. P. A. reminds us of the fact that there are several perennial candidates for secretary that have not given up hope of being "it" at the next annual meeting; besides, there are several new aspirants for the office. From past experience, it is to be hoped the standing and past records of all candidates will be more carefully inquired into than has been the case in the past. A very strong man is needed in that capacity for the next few years, in fact for years to come. The reorganization of the old society is bound to take place at the next meeting and with it a strong and efficient board of managers should be installed.

Mr. L. C. Verry, the well-known English authority on poultry, in his report on "Breeds of Poultry Most Suitable for the Farmer," published in the nineteenth volume of the British Dairy Farmers' Association, makes the following comments regarding dressed poultry at the Farmer's Dairy Show. At one time that good old English fowl, the Dorking, was considered the very best for the table, but here we have only six couples of cockerels and five of pullets staged. It is apparent that this once renowned breed is being quickly supplanted in public opinion by the Orpington, for in the class for a couple of cockerels of "any other variety," there were ten entries, eight of which were Orpingtons. The two classes for Indian Game and Dorking cross (which make a most excellent table fowl) contained only thirteen entries, whereas there were thirty exhibits in the following two classes for birds of any other cross, and in sixteen instances of these the Orpington had been used on one side or the other." The Orpington is gaining and deservedly so, but whether it will take away the lead from the American varieties as a market fowl is very doubtful. The demand for and popularity of yellow skin and yellow shanks in the open market is too great to overcome.

Australian Egg Laying Contest.

The third yearly contest for egg production closed at Hawkesbury College, N. S. W., the last day in March. We take the following from the Australian Hen:

"The third annual international egg-laying competition, organized by The Daily Telegraph, and conducted at the Hawkesbury Agricultural College by Mr. D. S. Thompson, Government Poultry Expert, terminated yesterday.

"The results achieved are perhaps of more practical service as an object lesson in the egg production branch of the poultry industry than were the more brilliant doings of the previous year. They demonstrate that under really adverse conditions good payable egg production can be secured. Such experiences are all evidence of the stability and possibilities of poultry-farming rightly conducted, and bring out the fact that a 'lean year' can nevertheless be made a profitable one. The 600 hens showed a profit of $1,200 over the cost of feed. The attention demanded by this number of hens does not fully represent one man's work.

"The falling off in the average egg yield for this competition as compared with the records for the previous test is simply a reflex of the difference in the weather conditions. In this respect Mr. Thompson was able to report of the 1903-04 competition: 'The weather throughout was favorable to a good production of eggs. There was plenty of rain, but it was periodic. At no time did we have a spell of wet weather sufficiently long to interfere materially with the laying. The winter months were rather dry, frosty, and cold, and as these frosts were followed by a fairly long period of damp, dull, cold weather well into the spring, the climatic conditions were undoubtedly in favor of the Asiatic varieties and adverse to the Mediterraneans.' As will be seen below the conditions were entirely reversed during the competition year just closed.

"The competition was carried out on the most practical lines. The hens got the simple everyday treatment such as the poultry keeper who had to make his living out of his birds could give. There was no fancy feed, but just the plain, wholesome diet that is available to anyone in the land. But, of course, the experience and constant observation of the management played an important part in tempting the layers to do their best under the circumstances. The influence and usefulness of such tests does not begin and end with the breeders immediately concerned. The main object of the promoters is to stimulate systematic breeding for egg production, and in this respect the influence of the competitions has extended far and near throughout Australasia, and even beyond. Where there was one poultry keeper two or three years ago who made egg production a definite object by breeding from tested layers, there are now hundreds doing so. And this army of practical workers in the most important branch of utility poultry culture is rapidly gaining zealous recruits, whose common objective is to breeds fowls of a higher and higher standard of productiveness. It is not too much to say that their efforts in this direction are becoming an object lesson to the world.

"The widespead interest in the competition was to some extent evidenced by the thousands of visitors who inspected the pens during the year. These not only came from all parts of the Commonwealth, but there were also visitors from New Zealand, America, Canada, England, South Africa and Japan. In Mr. Thompson's opinion 'there is no doubt that this interest which the competitions are causing will be to the advancement of the poultry industry.'

COMPARISON OF RESULTS.

"The most prominent feature of the records is a decline of 11 eggs per hen in the average production, as compared with the preceding test. Considering the great difference in the weather conditions covering the two years, it is a matter for congratulation that the disparity was not much greater. The financial results were affected by the fact that the average price of eggs was 30 per cent less than for the previous year. As a partial set off against this, however, the cost of feeding was 24 per cent less. The following compares the results of the three competitions:

	1902-3	1903-4	1904-5
Winning pens total.	1113	1308	1224
Lowest pens total...	459	666	532
Average laying per hen	130	163	152

Month	First	Second	Third
April	18.4	18.3	23.8
May	26.5	44.6	33.8
June	40.0	69.0	49.0
July	68.6	94.6	77.8
August	97.3	122.2	104.2
September	105.3	121.8	102.1
October	97.7	111.9	103.2
November	84.5	94.4	102.6
December	77.4	89.2	91.1
January	78.7	82.9	77.6
February	46.6	72.9	72.3
March	51.0	57.9	65.6

"A comparison of the average egg production and the average value of the eggs per hen of the various breeds is instructive and interesting. As a guide, however, to the relative merits of the different breeds, no significance can be attached to the positions ocupied by varieties in which there were only one or two pens competing. The following are the analyses:

Breed.	Per hen. Eggs.
6 Rose Comb Brown Leghorns....	178.50
6 Rhode Island Reds.....	176.00
96 White Leghorns.....	166.23
12 Black Hamburgs.....	163.83
6 Anconas.....	163.66
12 Rose Comb White Leghorns....	163.33
108 Black Orpingtons	159.48
6 Imperials	158.16
12 Buff Wyandottes	155.25
18 Brown Leghorns	154.77
18 Golden Wyandottes	151.55
36 White Wyandottes	151.02
18 Buff Leghorns	147.77
108 Silver Wyandottes	145.30
60 Buff Orpingtons	142.95
6 Andalusians	142.00
6 Jubilee Orpingtons	141.33
6 Pile Leghorns	140.50
24 Minorcas	133.38
18 Langshans	131.88
6 White Rocks	124.00
12 Partridge Wyandottes	107.00

THE AMERICAN PENS.

"Six of the seven pens constituting the contingent from America, arrived at the college on December 16. The whole of the pullets were received in very good health. But we have concluded from observation that the pullets arrived too young; that is to say, that the shipment of pullets from a winter to a summer zone is not advisable. The extreme change before the pullets had reached maturity played very heavily upon them, and it was only with very great care and attention that we got a large percentage of them through the unseasonable moult, and that we were able to pen six of each in good condition. This gave us a demonstration of data of some value, that the older fixed varieties had the greatest stamina, and came through the trying time with the least loss."

The average egg yield of the 600 hens was 152 eggs each, a grand showing for so many hens and pens which had been gathered from all over the world. The results are a tribute to the good management of Mr. Thompson, the expert who has had charge of the contest for the past three years.

Odds & Ends

Mr. E. G. Wyckoff states that young chicks do not require any food for the first twenty-four hours, but plenty of pure, fresh water should be within their reach, so that they may help themselves; a little fine cut green clover may be thrown about for them to peck at; the brooders should be cleaned daily and fresh litter thrown in them. Whenever the young chick is ready to eat is the time to feed them, and when they go themselves for a drink it is time for them to have water. They know better than their keepers what they need.

In the March issue of Inland Poultry Brother Hewes gives us the Rhode Island Reds in colors. These illustrations should be of great benefit to all who see them. A living image of the Reds in colors might relieve the minds of some of us who have heard so much of them in the last few months.

By the way, we hope that "Big Theodore" will be sent to the Pacific Coast as one of the judges at the Lewis and Clark Exposition.

Mr. Clarence C. DePue, of the Poultry Advocate, Syracuse, N. Y., called at this office last week, on his way South. We congratulate him on having the opportunity to visit both Washington and Atlantic City. May joy be always his.

Poultry will be moved from Freeport to Peotone, Illinois, where a new building will be erected in which to publish this beautiful publication. We congratulate Mr. Purvis and his associates on his success.

We have just received from the Excelsior Wire and Poultry Supply Company, Vesey Street, New York City, a copy of their new catalogue, which is a most beautiful, interesting, and valuable publication. Everyone should have a copy.

Secretary T. E. Orr has issued a call for a vote for the next meeting of the American Poultry Association. The circular states that the count of the vote will be made June 19. Every member of the executive committee should vote. There ought not be a single vote lacking, and the whole fraternity should see to it that a careful selection is made for the next meeting place with reference to the vast amount of important business that must be transacted.

BROWN'S BUDGET

Women have been direct factors in helping many a poultry fancier win prizes at poultry shows. It is often their care and good judgment that has conditioned the winners, but the men get the credit and prize money, both of which should be divided with the woman "power behind the throne."

Frequent replenishing of the drinking water in hot weather is very essential. Fowls drink very freely in summer, and water that has stood a long time in shallow dishes in the sun is anything but refreshing. Keep the drinking vessels clean. Wash them out once a day and scald once a week.

A customer writes: "My wife is a partner in the poultry interest, an active one, and has taught me lessons in poultry raising, and I thought I knew it all." Where the better half takes an interest in the poultry the pleasure of keeping fowls is doubled. The way to do is as this man does, make the wife a partner. Don't expect her to do the major part of the work and not get even recognition.

The time is now here when the roost and nest boxes should receive a wash of coal oil once a week. Take them out and go over them with a brush and coal oil. Saturate every crevice. Let them dry in the sun for three hours, then scatter air slaked lime on them and put everything back in the hen house.

A recent visitor said: "I am keeping Wyandottes and Rocks, but they didn't lay an egg during the winter, and commenced the last week in April, and have laid very few eggs." Enquiry showed he had fed them nothing but whole corn for six months. Some had died with bowel trouble. This man said he had condemned the man he bought his stock from. Now he says he will apologize. He has had his eyes opened.

"The plumage of birds has always formed an object of pleasing contemplation. The God of nature has shown by His love of spreading beauty over all His works, and opening up every source for the pure enjoyment of man. The splendid coloring of many of our domestic fowls is not necessary in itself, and must have been bestowed as a means of pleasure to the beholder." The above I find in an old poultry book.

More often than people are aware of the radical difference in soils is the main cause of the different degrees of success in poultry raising. Sandy or porous soils are best, and clay the poorest for poultry. Sandy land does not soon become contaminated, but the compact soils quickly become pregnant sources for disease. Air slaked lime, liberally used, is a great aid in keeping the soil in sanitary condition, and frequent digging up of the earth should be done also.

Some good work in the way of poultry experiments has been accomplished at the Agricultural Experiment Stations in some States. Men who had had previous experience with poultry conducted the experiments. Some of the stations have issued bulletins on poultry that too plainly proclaimed a novice was braving depths where an angel would fear to venture.

The "best breed" for anyone to keep is the one he prefers. The specialist secures his sucess from the fact that his one breed is his first true love. It is from this reason that there are so many opinions as to which breed is best. When a man keeps his favorite breed the work is a love, labor—a pleasure. If he is keeping a breed that does not appeal to his fancy, the attention is for dollars only.

Let the hens have a chance to run out on the grass an hour every day if they are confined in bare yards. If they are let out late in the evening after they are fed, they will confine their attention to picking grass, and won't visit the garden.

The average coops on the farms for broods of chickens are too much on the "sweat box" order. There are so many kinds of nocturnal enemies that it is necessary to fasten the coops up close. In these days of cheap wire netting, there is no reason why, with fine wire mesh netting, plenty of ventilation and fresh air should be denied, as they are indispensable for best results.

Perhaps the New Standard will be out by the time the adjourned meeting convenes in Hagerstown. It appears only just that at that meeting some official announcement be made when the awards should be governed by the new requirements. It seems unfair to require the birds of this season's breeding to be judged by the forthcoming requirements. All breeders should have an equal chance to know what is demanded in time to mate and breed their stock. Fowls that have been bred acording to the prevailing requirements should not be expected to compete with those which have been produced according to the New Standard ideas. The postponements of the Standard's appearance have been about as numerous as Patti's farewell tours in America. What a glorious time some poultry papers have had stamping the reasons for, "Why don't you send the Standard paid for months ago?" etc.

Today's opportunities are birds in the hand over tomorrow's probabilities. Do all you can today for the comfort of the poultry, and let the postponements be only the things that you couldn't get done. Use your brains, too, and "do" the work that is the most important.

There should be a revival of the Asiatic interests. The Light Brahmas are the only ones that are holding their own. The White Cochins and Langshans are two beautiful breeds that are becoming conspicuous by their absence at the poultry shows. The Black Cochin can never rival the Langshan, but there are no reasons why the Cochins should not regain their old time popularity. No doubt the excessive leg and toe feathering requirements have had something to do with their disappearance. American fanciers are just enthusiastic over their poultry pets as any fanciers on earth, but they are practical. They believe that beauty and utility should be a matched team in poultry breeds. They do not believe in going to such extremes in fancy points that a breed has to be ruined for utility.

As soon as you are through breeding remove the males from the flock. Eggs that are infertile keep longer than fertile ones. If you are going to pack eggs in water glass this summer use the eggs from the hens that are not running with male birds. You will be pleased with the results.

When you have a customer that has just started in the poultry business give him a copy of your favorite poultry paper. Tell him he should become a subscriber. Every new subscriber you get helps to increase your own business. Poultry papers make as many converts as the poultry shows.

ROSE COMB BLACK MINORCA.

PRACTICAL POINTERS

Feed regularly.

Do not crowd the incubator chicks.

Clean the drinking vessels regularly.

Dry feeding has been proven best for the sickly and healthy fowls.

Do not allow the eggs to get chilled if you want early chicks. A chilled egg will not hatch.

Charcoal is an ingredient in the diet that should not be omitted. It will brighten the combs and heads, purify the blood, correct looseness of the bowels, and aid wonderfully in digestion.

Set a hen on some dummy eggs for at least twenty-four hours before putting good eggs under her, and a fresh incubator should be run thirty-six or forty-eight hours before putting the eggs in.

POCKET-MONEY POULTRY.

The fourth book of The Feather's series is Myra V. Norys' latest production, "Pocket-Money Poultry." The experienced poultryman will read this book with both pleasure and profit. There are none so old and experienced but that have still much to learn. Perfection in this, as in other occupations, is hard to attain, and those who are doing the best still find room for improvement.

"Pocket-Money Poultry" has the following interesting chapters: How much Capital? Choosing a Line of Work, The Breed that Wins, Artificial and Natural Incubation, Satisfactory Coops and Brooders, Mothering Chicks, The First Season's Work, The First Season With Fancy Poultry, Confinement or Freedom, The First Poultry-House, Feeding for Eggs, The Embryo Chick at Testing Time, Ducks and Geese, Turkeys for Pocket-Money, Squabs for Pocket-Money, Pocket-Money Possibilities, Pocket-Money Pointers, etc. Price, 50c.

PIGEONS

The Homing Pigeon.

Practical Ideas Concerning this Winged Messenger.

This pigeon, unlike the fancy varieties, is not bred for any striking peculiarity of color markings or formation of certain points, as, for instance, the skull of the Carrier or Barb. Neither is it bred for size—that is, beyond that which is compatible with health. Although not bred for any of the above peculiarities, the working Homer is nevertheless not produced promiscuously. It requires not only keen perception as regards stamina, bone, muscle, etc., but it also requires a fancier who makes the matching of his birds a study from year's end to year's end, as it is invariably the fancier who can tell you every drop of blood in his birds, and from what strains, who carries off the coveted long-distance prizes. It is due to his careful selection when matching his birds that he wins a prize.

BLUE CHECK HOMER.

In matching your Homers it is one of the first essentials to know of what strains your birds are, and whether this or that strain possesses certain qualifications that you wish to infuse into your birds. If you are familiar with these points, you want then to reflect and see if the bird that you have selected for this cock or hen will be a fit mate. To match together two birds, either of which are weak in bone or either of which come from a noted slow (although perhaps sure) homing strain, is a very hazardous undertaking. It is better not to match them at all than to breed them for a season only to find that you have a lot of duffers that, although they will home, will take such a length of time that you would have to be ashamed to fly them in the company of others. To insure strong, fast flying Homers it is necessary only to get birds that have a record themselves of having flown long distances in good time, or those that have produced such birds. Then it is necessary to see that your birds possess an abundance of bone, without being cumbersome or too large; it is the medium-sized bird that generally wins the long distance races.

Another essential point is to note that there are no defects in either bird, or that they do not descend from birds that have had canker, wing disease or roup, for no matter how well they may appear, birds from such a stock are dear as a gift. An intelligent eye is also not to be overlooked.

After you have your birds properly mated the next thing that will require close attention is the food. Many make a serious mistake in purchasing cheap feed. Cheap feed is on a par with poor victuals. It is just as well to expect a bird to fly three or four hundred miles on cheap food as to expect a man to do a day's laboring work on a piece of bread and some water; neither has any strength, and when called upon to use their muscles they are so soft and flabby that they fail to perform those functions for which they are formed. Nothing is more necessary to a Homing Pigeon than wholesome and strengthening food. The best food is Canadian pease, tares and a little old wheat as a relish. Corn should not be fed to the Homing pigeons during the hot weather, as it is too heating. In the winter, when the birds are not flying or breeding, corn can be fed in place of the pease. Never feed Homing pigeons on hempseed to any extent; a little as a relish once a week will do no harm, but let that suffice. Never neglect to give your birds a plentiful supply of fresh water.—J. D. Abel.

Notes on Squab Growing.

One of the most enthusiastic squab growers of the country writes that he firmly believes that there is a great future for the squab growing industry, and that more breeders are needed to supply the rapidly increasing demand. This is true, but the writer should have added that the demand is for better quality and heavier weights. There is entirely too much of a belief that a squab is a squab no matter how large or how small. This is not true. Squabs that weigh under eight pounds to the dozen never sell at a profit.

Several years ago any kind of a young pigeon would sell profitably as a squab, but thorough investigation of the markets proves beyond doubt that at the present time nothing but plump birds well grown at an average of over eight pounds per dozen can be sold at a profit. Those who hope to make money out of small, poorly grown ones will be sadly disappointed.

A dozen pairs of squab breeders are plenty for any one to start with. This will be enough to give you all the experience in the management that you will need for the first twelve months. After that you can easily be your own judge as to the number you are able to keep.

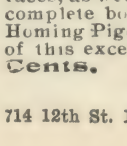
Squab breeders must be kept comfortable, clean, and very well fed during the breeding season on all the wheat and cracked corn they will eat, with a few Canadian pease and other grain mixed in, but the greater part of the food during the breeding season should be good, sound wheat and cracked corn.

Do not become discouraged because your pigeons do not lay the first week you have them. They may not lay for a month. It is often better that they should not, for in this way they become well acquainted in the loft before they make their nests. Sunshine, fresh air, and as cool surroundings as it is possible for them. Do not be surprised if some of the young squabs die in the nests or if the parent birds leave the first pair and do not raise them. All these troubles come to everyone who tries to establish a squab growing business.

It is impossible for anyone to succeed in the squab growing business unless plenty of good fresh water is provided for the pigeons to drink and for them to feed to the young. Grit and a little green food is good now and then just for a variety, but is not a necessity.

Raising Chickens on Shares.

Sometime ago we noticed in the columns of the Country Gentleman a request for information on raising chickens on shares. We notice the same question propounded in a recent issue of the Rural New Yorker. The question is as follows:



"First. A will furnish incubator, brooder, eggs and feed; chicks to be turned over to A when six weeks old. Second. B furnishes incubator and brooder, and A eggs and feed; age of surrendering chicks, six weeks. What should B get cash for each chick, or what per cent of chicks, if he prefers this mode of settlement? What should six-weeks-old chicks sell for within thirty miles of New York?"

The answer to this question depends upon many conditions. To answer the last clause first, chickens should sell at six weeks for more than they will bring. What would you do with a six-weeks-old chick on the market? People talk of putting broilers into the market weighing from one to one and one-fourth pounds in six weeks, but they can not do it, and six-weeks-old chicks would be worth thirty miles or three hundred miles from New York just what they would bring. Anyone that would enter into an agreement to grow broilers in the way suggested, had very much better go to market, purchase the eggs, home grow the chicks to twelve weeks old, when they make good broilers, and sell them to the fancy trade in New York City. On an average it takes about three eggs in the incubator to put one broiler in the market, and the chicks would be worth the cost of the three eggs each, the time, care and feeding of them.

The Patent Chick.

A man gave an incubator chicken
He fed it patent foods and stones;
With a patent grinder he ground it bones;
It had a patent right to grow,
And a patent fence on which to crow,
Instead a patent nest it made,
And a patent nest egg therein laid,
From which was hatched a patent chick—
And that's the way he got rich quick.

The Feather's Practical Pigeon Book.

"The Feather's Practical Pigeon Book," by J. C. Long, is just from the press. It is superbly printed on calendered paper, and illustrated with a half-hundred fine half-tones. The cover is of heavy material, printed in colors. It is just the kind of book that will be read and appreciated by the masses. This book is credited with being the best and most practical book published on breeding and raising all kinds of pigeons. Those who have seen it can not speak too well of it, and it will undoubtedly prove the text-book of the country on pigeon culture. No library or home of a pigeon fancier is complete without it. The illustrations are said to be the finest and most accurate ever drawn, and I do not hesitate to return the money to all who are not satisfied with it. Price 50 cents, postpaid.

You will note the cut above. It has real worth and merit, and is not only useful, but an actual necessity and for which there is good demand. The poultry business is not going to become, but has already become one of the greatest industries in the land. I have an invention that is abreast of the times. It saves time, and work, and waste of feed in poultry raising. It is a device that all poultry raisers need, can use and will want if once seen.

THE HOMING PIGEON.

The demand for a perfectly reliable and practical book on the "feathered racehorse," has prompted me to publish my new book, "The Homing Pigeon." This book is 16mo. in size, printed on excellent paper, and completely illustrated from cover to cover It is a complete book in every way, and treats thoroughly on the history of the Homing Pigeon, breeding, training, and flying, as well as the many handy and business uses for which these birds may be used. It is fascinating to breed Homing Pigeons, besides being a most practical study. Every detail is told in this book in a clear, concise, and explanatory manner; and the various writers therein have given us a mine of information. The reader is taught all about the selection of good breeders, the breeding of youngsters for racing qualities, training them to the best advantage; also the rules and conditions for flying birds in races, as well as for business purposes. Price, 25 cents.

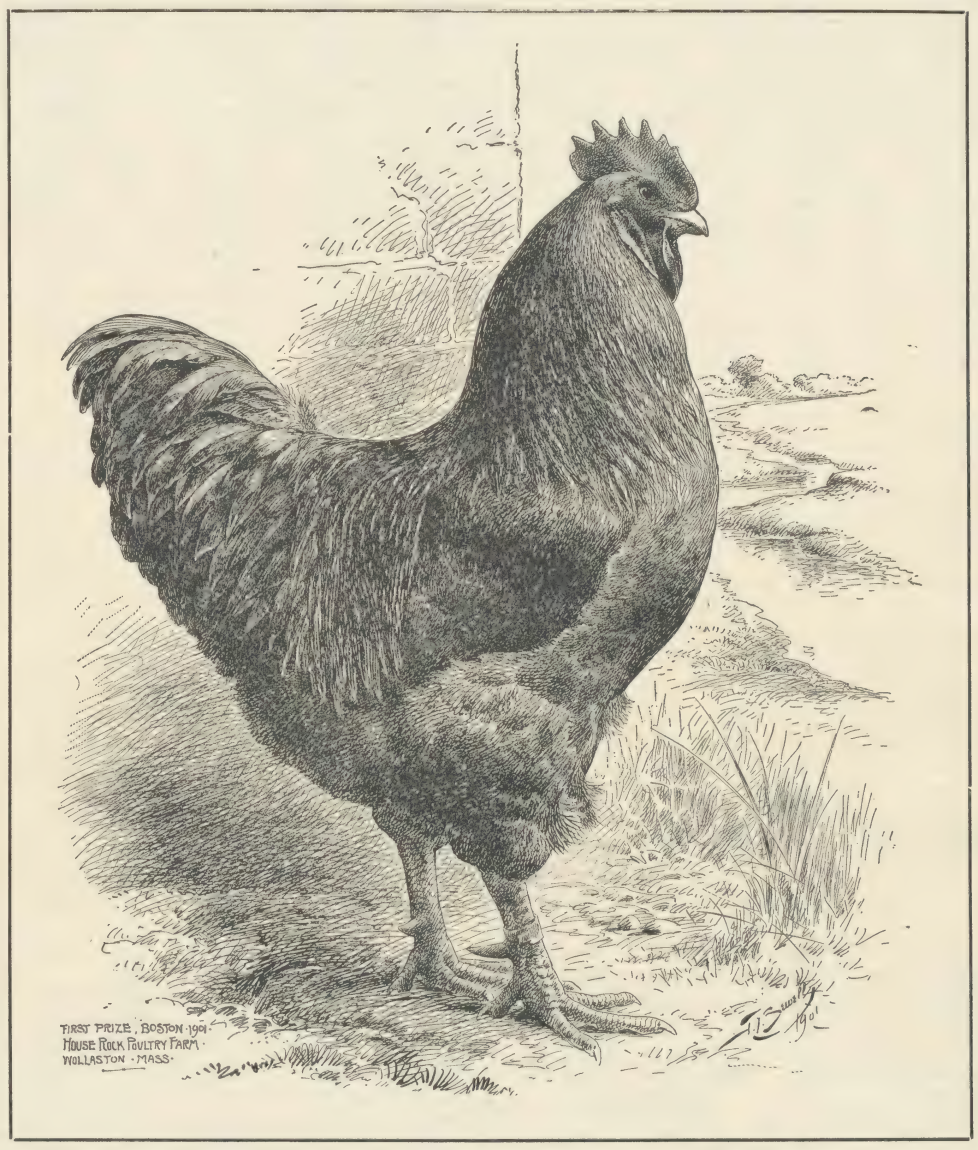
Volume XXIV. Washington, D. C., May 27, 1905. No. 610.

MEAT PRODUCING BREEDS

The present distinction in market poultry is between what are known as meat and egg-producing fowls. Some are pleased to call the Asiatic family the meat-producing family; the American breeds, the general purpose fowls for both meat and eggs; the Mediterranean family, the egg-producing fowls. To divide these into families so as to distinguish them, we shall designate those we now describe, the meat-producing fowls.

The earliest furore in poultry came with the advent of the Brahma and the Cochins in this country and in England. The first real excitement about poultry was when the Brahmas sold in Boston and the Cochins in London for hundreds of dollars per pair. The papers all through the world noted this fabulous transaction, and reported that these fowls were capable of laying two, and some of them three eggs per day; that some of them produced eggs double the size of those laid by other hens. This aroused great curiosity and the demand for this variety of fowls became so great that every one who possessed a chicken of any kind of color that had feathers on its shanks or toes reported them as of the new breeds, and sold them at fabulous prices.



With this as a beginning the fanciers of this and other countries brought out of chaos the three families—the Brahmas, the Cochins and the Langshans. These three in several varieties are the fowls that comprise the Asiatic or meat-producing family.

The originals were all rather long in leg and ill-shaped; but through care in selection, they have been brought up to the present beautiful formation of the three breeds that comprise this family. They were all naturally fine egg-producers, but owing to the extreme cultivation for fancy points and more profuse feathering than is really desirable for best results, they are not at present such good egg-producers as in former years. Yet there are many strains of them kept especially for producing meat and eggs that are quite prolific in their production of eggs, and grow more quickly than do the higher bred specimens into market meat.

Nothing beats the Brahmas, light and dark, for market meat and capons. They are quiet, easy to care for and very large in body, plump, and carry a large proportion of meat in proportion to the bone and offal. These are the fowls most largely used throughout New England for the making of capons, roasters and virgin cockerels. All three of these can be used for roasting fowls, and all the males can be plucked like capons and sold as such when the market is ripe for their disposal.

Both the Light and Dark Brahmas are equally desirable for this purpose. The dark variety have been sorely neglected, we presume because they have not been pushed for popularity and talked about as much as have the light variety. The Light Brahma is more largely kept and is better known than any other of the Asiatic family; following these in popularity are the Buff Cochins and the Black Langshans.

The two varieties of Brahmas—light and dark; the four varieties of Cochins—buff, black, white and partridge, and the Black and White Langshans make eight varieties in beautiful colors and plumage to select from when large heavy breeds of poultry for meat and other market purposes are desired.

S. C. RHODE ISLAND RED.

Throughout New England, New Jersey and some portions of New York the Brahmas are extensively grown for market poultry. There is a special demand for this heavy-weight poultry in many parts of the East, and plump, and neatly prepared for market, they will sell at almost as good prices as the lighter weight of roast fowls. These large heavy-weight fowls are used for cold-cuts and chicken sandwiches. Whenever the price goes above sixteen cents in the New York market, old heavy-weight turkeys are used, even if they cost two or three cents more per pound, as they provide more breast meat and the cold cuts of a turkey sell for a little more than cold chicken. This is the only advantage that the cheaper grades of turkeys have over the heavy-weight fowls.

For exhibition purposes, and in the showroom, no breed is more attractive than the Light Brahmas and Buff Cochins. These seem to be greater favorites among those who attend exhibitions than the other varieties of the Asiatic family, yet the Partridge Cochin is also a great favorite.

If graded in popularity, according to their numbers and the attention they receive in the exhibition hall, the Light Brahma, the Buff Cochin and the Partridge Cochin would grade as mentioned.

To Succeed.

"No excellence without very great labor" is a maxim that might be constantly studied in the poultry business. We know of nothing but weeds that will succeed by themselves. Unfortunately there are many useless propositions in the poultry business, none of which equal weeds, for they will neither prosper when encouraged, nor when neglected. Discard all these weedy propositions. Select that which is good, and strive hard for success, for in this way only can we succeed, not only with poultry, but in all walks of life.

The Round-Up.

About three hundred and fifty invited guests gathered in The Auditorium banquet hall at Chicago during the evening of May 18th to celebrate the annual Round-Up of "White's Class Advertising Co," an event of vast importance to publishers. Advertising men, advertisers and business men in general, who do business with this firm have inscribed upon their banner as their marching order, "True Blue, Pure Gold." That such gatherings on similar occasions do good no one can deny, but this special one had more than passing significance, in that it was composed almost half of ladies.

It was to be expected that every feature would be complete. The guests were placed at tables artistically garnished with greens and flowers; the feast prepared was carefully selected; the attention to the gathered hosts was beyond reproach. The whole was so complete in detail as to remove all concern from the mind of the entertainer, and place all present at perfect ease.

Like the gathering of States, the occasion was opened with prayer and after feasting the inner man the following addresses were delivered, with Prof. Conway McMillan, of the University of Minnesota, as toastmaster. Prof. Fred H. Rankin, of the University of Illinois, spoke on "Agricultural Possibilities;" Hon. T. D. Harman, President of National Agricultural Press League, on "Agricultural Press;" Henry Field, Seedsman, on "Advertising Products of the Soil;" Hon. W. D. Hoard, ex-Governor of Wisconsin, on "The Modern Farmer—His Necessities;" Worthington C. Holman, editor of Salesmanship, on "Advertising Salesmanship," and Col. Chas. T. Mills, on "Universal Expositions."

Professor McMillan was quite fortunate in his introduction until he perchance came across the toastmaster of the previous year when he returned some favors bestowed upon him last year, but Mr. Walker was not to be out-done, and told how the professor made a certain kind of breakfast food not on the bill of fare, much to the amusement of Mr. Conway and his guests.

Professor Rankin told of the valuable aid given by Mr. White to the St. Louis Exposition, of the great value of agricultural education as advanced by State Agricultural Colleges, and of the possibilities of agriculture. He thought that the ladies were the greatest possibilities in agricultural advertising, because they did the bulk of the buying for the household and the home. The speaker overlooked the fact that the bulk of these purchases were made possible by the little hen which provides the flow of ready cash.

Mr. Harman was unable to be present on account of illness. Mr. Field, of Iowa, told of the ins and outs of the seed business to the amusement of all. He made a point in saying that a well-written advertisement backed up by a perfect illustration of the goods for sale, was only equalled by having a good illustration well described.

The gathering was honored by the presence of ex-Governor Hoard, who is always interesting and original. He said that his subject covered the entire farming world, and their necessities were so great that he could scarcely conceive of them. He thought the farmer was less understood than any other creature, and at times he wondered if they understood themselves. Mr. Wallace, of Wallace's Farmer, Des Moines, Iowa, dropped a few words of wisdom as he left for his train. From those who do something we can learn, and these two men are strongly in evidence in that class.

Mr. Holman told, in an attractive manner, how to sell advertising. We should join him in the point made of fairness to all in all things and doubly so in advertising. The advertising columns should be a guarantee of what we have to sell, and never used to mislead or injure in the least.

Col. Chas. F. Mills told in carefully selected words of the well-deserved success of Mr. White, which has come as the result of efforts well directed. These same efforts had made the success of all things that had succeeded, and would continue so to do for all time to come. He congratulated the world on the successful termination of all past expositions, and looked for better in the future, the result of experience.

Discussion was not indulged in to any considerable extent as the hour was late at the close of the regular program. On all sides were heard expressions of pleasure, at having the opportunity to be present and meet old acquaintances in so pleasant a manner.

The incubator manufacturers were on hand to exchange ideas, compare notes, and to plan for next year. The campaign with some of them will be materially broadened and extended into wider fields. None seemed to be discontented or disappointed. The opinion prevailed that there was plenty of room and business for all, and that those who made good to their customers were gradually gaining a following which remained with them from year to year. Many of the supply people are delighted with results. Those who manufacture and sell foods for poultry are congratulating themselves upon the attainment of success and all in all, it was a round-up, all along the line.

Among the ladies of the poultry press were the wives of editors Bates and Heck, and Miss Piggott. We wish that time and space might permit publishing the names of all present, but as this is impossible we limit the list to the ladies of the poultry press, and with this we add the fact that the ladies were beautifully gowned and added an air of attractiveness to the occasion.

Artist Schilling, formerly of this paper, is well established in the office of White's Class Advertising Co., where he is doing some beautiful work of poultry and other live stock.

Mr. Geo. G. Bates, of the American Poultry Journal, extended the courtesy of The Chicago Athletic Club to the representatives of this paper while in Chicago. Editors Heck and Schurman did themselves proud in a continued effort to entertain us while we were guests in their city. We wish them success.

Mr. Nix, of Homer City, is back in working harness for good. The Prairie State will be more in evidence than ever before. Mr. Nix is young, ambitious and full of experience, and glowing predictions are made for the future.

So many incubator manufacturers were present that we hesitate to mention names for fear of missing any one. They are a lot of thoroughly good business men and it was a pleasure to meet them. Young Hiawatha, as we were pleased to call him, was so full of pleasant sayings that we doubt very much the necessity of showing him, even though so far away toward the setting sun.

The June show at Celeron, N. Y., has been declared off owing to lack of interest and support of local fanciers.

In starting a contest of this kind there always arises conditions detrimental to egg production such as transportation of fowls and their strange surroundings. The house in which these birds spent the winter was of the curtain front pattern with a large curtain surface, as it was built for a larger number of birds than was provided by the Kansas White Wyandotte Club, which arranged for this contest.

The winter was the most severe ever known in the State, with long continued cold, and with the temperature as low as thirty degrees below zero, and with so few birds in each pen it is hardly necessary to state that the egg yield was diminished. While the conditions were not auspicious in this particular, yet the fowls in the contest have made an excellent laying record, and one that compares favorably with the results obtained in previous authentic laying contests.

The first pen, Rose Comb Rhode Island Reds, are owned by Dr. J. Martin, Wichita, Kans. These pullets were laying when shipped to the college, being the only ones laying at that time. They laid heavily up to January 1, 1905, when several of them molted and stopped laying. They are more inclined to broodiness than any other breed in the contest.

The second pen, Rose Comb White Leghorns, are owned by Mrs. Jennie E. Warren, Cottonwood Falls, Kans. These were fairly well matured pullets. They seemed rather out of condition at the beginning of the contest, but recovered and gave excellent results through the winter. They were not affected by the low temperature as were their single comb cousins. No. 25 of this pen "went light" in February, and died. She was replaced by No. 89 on April 5.

The third pen, Buff Wyandottes, are owned by G. C. Wheeler, of Harlem, Missouri. These pullets have done well, ranking their white cousins.

The fourth pen, White Wyandottes, are owned by Beecher & Beecher, Belleville, Kansas. These pullets have been in prime condition from the first and one of them holds the six-months individual record.

The fifth pen, single comb White Leghorns, are owned by the Kansas State Agricultural College. These pullets did well, but suffered more than any other breed from the cold. No. 60 suddenly died April 17 and was immediately replaced by No. 7.

The sixth pen, Barred Plymouth Rocks, are owned by Mrs. J. B. Jones, Abilene, Kansas. This pen consists of hens while all others entered were pullets. This was due to an unfortunate misunderstanding and is manifestly unfair to the breed, as hens are generally considered not to be as good winter layers as the pullets. They were also handicapped in that they had not finished molting. They are inclined to be overfat and are heavy eaters.

The last pen, Light Brahmas, are owned by F. A. Brown, Onaga, Kansas. These birds have been in the best condition up to the present time. The small egg production early in the season must be explained by the fact that they mature slowly. In this pen and in all pens, excepting the Leghorns, the egg yield fell during April, owing to the broody condition of the hens. All broody hens were promptly removed to a strange pen which seemed to break up the condition and in ten days they were again ready for laying.

The accompanying table gives the egg yield and value and the cost of feed figured on local markets. At the close of the year more complete results, including broody periods, fertility of eggs and other points of interest, will be published. A study of the table will reveal a surprising difference in the individual records of the hens. This contest should prove much more interesting and valuable than previous contests, where no records were kept of the birds as individuals.—Beecher & Beecher.

Egg Producing Hens.

To be successful with egg-producing hens is to hatch them reasonably early, feed them for a regular strong growth throughout the entire summer, and bring them into the winter season thoroughly moulted, and with a new coat of good mature feathers. If well cared for, grown and housed as they should be, these will be the profitable hens for next winter. Next to these will be the one-year-old hens that were first-class egg producers as pullets. Hens that are older than these, or the late hatched or immature pullets, should be the ones to be selected, fed and fattened for the market poultry.

BOYER'S TALK

Trap Nest Trials and Farm Experiences.

March showed a big increase in laying over the month of February, being 1,456 eggs against 636 for February, and 462 for January. In other words, there were more eggs laid in March than the number of January and February combined. We naturally look for increased laying in both March and April, owing to the season being milder, and the poultry are not exposed to so much inclement weather, as is the case in the previous months.

March	Pen 4	Pen 5	Pen 6	Pen 7	Pen 8	Pen 9	Pen 10	Pen 11	Total
1	3	5	7	6	5	6	3	3	38

31	5	6	6	9	8	6	5	6	51
Total	176	153	219	216	198	211	158	145	1456

The above table shows that the highest number of eggs gathered in one day was 63, and the lowest 33. The figures in February were 34 and 13, respectively; and in January 25 and 6. Pen No. 6 again leads in number of eggs laid, giving 219. In January this pen was ahead, but was beaten in February by Pen No. 9.

Pen.	No hens laying.	No. hens not laying.	Average pen record.
No. 4	15	0	11 eggs.
No. 5	14	1	10.13 eggs.
No. 6	14	1	15.13 eggs.
No. 7	15	0	14.6 eggs.
No. 8	15	0	13.3 eggs.
No. 9	15	0	14.1 eggs.
No. 10	9	1	15.3 eggs.
No. 11	10	0	14.5 eggs.
Total	107	3

This gives Pen No. 6, with 14 laying hens, the highest pen record, and Pen No. 5, also with 14 hens, the lowest. The highest number of eggs gathered in one day from a single pen was thirteen, taken from Pen No. 9, March 5.

During the month we found nineteen eggs outside the trap nests in Pen No. 4; eight in Pen No. 5; five in Pen No. 6; seven in Pen No. 7; seven in Pen No. 8; fourteen in Pen No. 9; five in Pen No. 10; and twenty-six in Pen No. 11. The record further shows a gain of thirty-three layers during the month of March.

For the month Light Brahma hen, No. 85, laid twenty-three eggs, which added to her previous record gives her a total of fifty-nine since the first day of January. Other good records are as follows:

During the month, White Wyandotte hen, No. 30, did not lay an egg. In fact, this hen has not laid at all this year. Whether or not we have found the sterile hen is hard to say, but it looks very much that way. In Pen No. 6 we got no eggs from Pullet No. 39, on account of broodiness. One of the Light Brahma hens in Pen No. 10 has also not given us an egg this year. But the record makes a good showing, and we believe that it will develop that we have some very good layers among the lot, and some very poor ones also.

NOTES.

The trap nests have taught us a valuable fact, one that heretofore has been more or less of a puzzle to us. When we started taking records, January 1, with the present lot of Wyandottes, we found that a certain number laid very brown eggs, some of which would have done credit in color to those laid by Brahmas. In February we found that these eggs were not so brown as they were the month before, and here in March some of them are next to being white. What does this show? To our way of thinking it makes plain the fact that there is a certain amount of coloring matter in the ovaries which is very strong in color at first, but, according to the demand made upon it, grows weaker and weaker. Then the hen stops laying for a week or two, and when she re-starts these eggs again assume their good color.

Last fall, when making up our regular breeding yards, we selected only hens that were giving us a rich brown-colored egg. The first few lots of eggs we gathered from these pens were very good in color, and yet today we are receiving eggs from these very hens with all shades of color ranging from a good brown to a real light color, all of which goes to prove our theory to be correct—that as the hen increases her egg record, the coloring matter decreases. There is room for further experiments along this line, which we hope to some time take up.

This promiscuous lot of hens have been very satisfactory from a health standpoint, only one showing any signs of sickness, and that one showed only a slight canker in the mouth. Several doses of vaseline soon remedied the trouble. But about twelve or fifteen of them did develop very scaly legs, and we had quite a task to remove these scales, which we finally did by a number of applications made of an ointment composed of vaseline and sulphur. We mixed as much sulphur as we could in a lot of vaseline until we had a soft ointment which could be easily rubbed on the legs of the afflicted birds. The result was very satisfactory.

After a number of years experience with this scaly leg disease we find that it can be prevented if the rule is adopted never to allow a bird in the breeding pen that shows any signs of scales on its legs; also by never setting a scaly-legged hen; and lastly by always keeping the houses perfectly clean. Scaly legs are developed by a minute insect, bred from filth, and which burrows in the skin of the leg, raising the scales.

Our trials this year with fifteen hens in a pen, and alternating males, has been very successful. Last year we used only ten hens to a pen, but secured as good results this year as last. Our home hatches this year run very high, so far. Two hens set on Brahma eggs hatched every egg, and several hens on Wyandotte eggs brought out 90 per cent of them. The chicks hatched showed remarkable vigor and at this writing are growing like weeds.

Visitors to the yards of the writer often express surprise at the clean, white appearance of our Wyandottes. How do we keep them so? There is no secret about it: we keep the houses and the runs perfectly clean. Both must have strict attention. Hens love to wallow in the dirt, and if that dirt is of a sticky nature, it is bound to more or less stain the plumage. As stated in a previous issue, there is a double run to each of our poultry houses. While the hens are occupying the one, we have the other sown to some green crop. This disinfects the soil and removes all impurities, consequently leaving the dirt in a clean state. Hens wallowing in that can readily shake it off their feathers, and are thus greatly benefited in appearance.

Talking about cleanliness brings up the louse question. One of the greatest drawbacks to poultry culture by the beginner is the destruction caused by lice. There is no discounting the fact that these pests cause heavy losses, and when we say this to the beginner, we do not wish to infer that lice do not visit the farms of the veterans in the business. But the latter have learned the important lesson that prevention is better than cure, and by adopting a regular system of keeping the houses clean keep the enemy at bay. The time to fight lice is not alone when the grand army has made an attack upon our stock. We begin in January and continue to the next January in fighting the enemy. Regularly each day the droppings are cleaned up, twice a year the houses are whitewashed, four times a year the coops are thoroughly fumigated, once a week kerosene is liberally used on the roosts and in the nest boxes. We attack the enemy in this way while they are in hiding during the cold months, and those that escape punishment come out upon the advent of warm weather, but as they are few in numbers are more easily handled. We believe in the use of insect powder, and occasionally dust the fowls, but with the rigid work we put in force the entire year, we are not often called upon to use an insect powder.

The fact must not be lost sight of that cleanliness is the best insect "powder," and we should see that the rule is strictly enforced.

Quite a book could be written on that one theme, "Cleanliness." It adds to the beauty of a flock and their quarters; it keeps the stock in good health; it increases the production of eggs; it makes the project profitable. Three hundred fowls kept under strict sanitary methods will bring greater returns than five hundred of the hit-or-miss plan. The poultryman who cannot find time to keep the place in a clean condition had better cut his business in two, for he is not capable of managing what he has.

Valuable help to a poultry farm are well-trained cats. Now we know that for ages poultry writers have condemned the feline tribe, and declared them to be one of the worst enemies on a farm. So they are if kept half starved, and never taught the difference between a chick and a sparrow. On the farm of the writer are four old cats. When kittens, they were kept right among the chicks. They are always regularly fed. The old theory used to be that a well-fed cat never looks for mice. That is a mistake. These cats are on a hunt the whole day and part of the night. Before the cats were installed this place was over-run with rats and mice. For several years rats have given our farm a wide berth, and mice are only occasionally seen. For ten years not less than four cats have had charge of the premises, and in all that time we have not, to the best of our knowledge, lost a single chick.

The Weight of a Chick.

The Poultry West tells us that the egg weighs two ounces, when hatched. At one week old the chick should weigh two ounces, at three weeks six ounces, four weeks ten ounces, six weeks eighteen ounces, nine weeks two pounds, eleven weeks old forty-one ounces. This should and could be if proper attention is given to feeding.

Editorial Gossip.

There is so much in the poultry and agricultural press with reference to managing the sitting hen, and the growing of chicks with the mother hen, that one would imagine that this was a new feature and not the original plan of growing chicks. The best way to manage a sitting hen is to take care of her, keep her quiet and clean, give her sufficient to eat and drink, and let her alone on the nest to do the work she understands so well. Whenever people take the hen off the nest three or four times a day to feed her, to sprinkle her with carbolic acid and kerosene, and to give her fancy kinds of foods, they will simply destroy the ability of the hen to do her work. Just make her a nice clean nest in a box, give her some eggs, put her in a quiet corner in an out of the way place, permit her to go and come from the nest as she desires, give her some wheat and grain to eat, and a dust bath, and she will do the rest.

We notice that some of our contributors are worried about the age at which poultry should be eaten. They speak of turkeys, ducks, geese, and other fowls, and jump into the cold storage proposition as if it were an imposition upon the world. The best time to eat any kind of poultry is within twenty-four hours from the time that it has been killed. If the head is severed from the body with a sharp hatchet, the carcass thoroughly drained of its blood, picked, drawn thoroughly clean and kept in a cool place for twenty-four hours, it is then at its best and will never be again so good for food as at that time.

After that the next best period is about the seventh day. If poultry is to be kept beyond the seventh day it should be stuck in the roof of the mouth with a knife, dry picked, cooled in a natural atmosphere of about 40, then placed in cold storage, where if properly kept it will remain good a year or longer. The writer of this has eaten a turkey that had been in cold storage for three years and found it equal to any that he had ever eaten from the storage house. One that had remained over four years was rather dry and not so palatable, but poultry if properly kept in cold storage is just as good for food at the end of one year as at the end of three weeks.

Softshelled eggs are a product of the winter months. Where poultry are kept principally on corn as a diet, and fed very little else and allowed to hunt for their green food and their good shell forming material through the snow and ice, it is not unusual to have plenty of soft shelled eggs. It is a disorder brought about by neglecting to supply the proper food for producing egg shells. Those who furnish plenty of shell-forming material and grit, seldom, if ever, have much trouble in this way. Soft shell eggs are apt to induce the bad habit of egg eating, which is hard to break when once acquired. If plenty of the shell forming material is provided there will be little trouble with the soft shell eggs.

No one needs to have the least concern as to his future in the poultry business providing he will strive to reach the top. There is always plenty of room in that locality, and the raising of good specimens returns a handsome profit. It does not seem to make any difference what breed or variety is selected, provided that you are successful in producing high-class exhibition specimens. Not for years have such birds sold at as high prices as during the past winter, and the predictions are that there will continue to be a very heavy demand for them.

We notice in the Successful Poultry Journal the statement that the sale of eggs for hatching has been very backward this season. It has been quite different with many of the Eastern breeders, quite a number of whom write us that they are five or six weeks behind with their orders for eggs for hatching, and we know of some growers of turkeys who have been overrun with orders for turkey eggs for hatching far beyond their ability to supply them. We presume that the demand is beginning to grow larger for the higher quality and not so active for the medium and lower grade.

In looking over an exchange several years old, we notice a remark by Cardiac (the late G. P. Rheynard) which brings up the reminiscences of Cochin days. He tells us that Rackham and Tooker are at swords point as to the question of Cochin feathering. Sternberg is gathering information from the English breeders, while McGrew and Hare are sticking to rich under color. This reminds us of many years ago when the papers were full of the Cochin .controversy. The present quiet condition of Cochin traffic is a most perfect illustration of what may be done by publicity and what has come to the Cochins by allowing them to be almost forgotten.

Way out in Canon Falls, Minnesota, has been produced a new variety of poultry, which they call "Bluetts." They have the color of the Andalusian and the form of the Rhode Island Reds with rose combs. The males show a golden color of wing. The same breeder has Blue Bantams and some Blue Duck Wings. We are afraid that our Minnesota friend will be struck with the blues and ruled out when he makes an application for admission to the Standard.

If you wish to catch your poultry do not chase them all over the field. Get a stick seven or eight feet long. Make a hook of strong wire with a spring to it that will go over the shank of the fowl. Walk up quietly to the specimen you wish to catch and hook it by the shank. If the hook is properly made it will fit close to the shank and the fowl is captured. This is simple and easy, and does not injure the fowl or overheat it as chasing it about will do.

Turkeys have sold for the longest price in the markets during the past two seasons than ever before. This is a pointer that should teach hundreds to grow plenty of fine turkeys for market.

We have had several inquiries of late for information about the dove fancy. If there is anyone familiar with doves (not pigeons), but ring as well as other varieties of doves, we should like to hear from him.

We copy the following from the Successful Poultry Journal: "The American Fancier in its new home shows many improvements in all respects. It is the only weekly publication in the United States devoted to poultry. Messrs. Howard, McGrew and Drevenstedt who now take part in making The American Fancier and the Feather form a combination that is hard to beat." We are glad to know that Brother Heck can see a good thing as far as any one we know of. He seems to have looked far enough ahead to have planned well for his beautiful magazine.

The argument as to how to feed hens to gain the best egg yield is continually coming to the front. Mr. James R. Covert, a government expert, states that the nutritive ration for the laying hen and the milk cow should be approximately the same. When these statements are made, as they often are, the reply comes back that poultry can not eat hay and corn fodder and ensilage. Of this everyone is fully aware, but the hen is very fond indeed of alfalfa or clover hay during the winter months as well as in summer. Nothing is better for them and for egg production than green food. The hen will gain the same advantage from the alfalfa or clover hay, mixed with the proper grain and meal foods, as the cow does from the ensilage when mixed with hay and dry meals. The question is to feed the same elements in that mixture of feed that can be best handled by the hen.

The Buff Orpington Duck may soon be with us. This new duck stands sixth in the egg-laying contest for ducks in Australia. It is written of them that they can withstand more heat than any other variety. We presume that this is a winning trade-mark for a country that has so hot and dry a climate as Australia. The mercury jumped to 116 degrees high in the shade over there last January, while we were jumping as many degrees below in snow drifts. It is not to be wondered at that some one should invent a breed that knew how to dodge these X- rays and do business.

Egg-laying contests are all the go i Australia. They have just finished the yearly contest open to the world in which fowls from this country compete. Then they have the Victoria, the Queensland, and the Gatton competitions, and another is known as the S. A. Competition. In addition to all these there is under way a duck-laying contest, the results of which are most surprising. About one year ago it was remarked with surprise that a pen of Minorcas had done so badly, but a pen of Minorcas headed the whole list in the Victoria contest for December last, and a pen of Langshans second, with Leghorns third. These laying contest records show conclusively that the best laying hens may come from almost any variety. No one bird is superior to all others in this respect. Good-laying hens must be fed for the pen, fed for the race, and have the ability to respond to good feeding, and the constitution to endure to the end.

This is the age within which we must all begin to learn the lesson, that from small things must come the future existence of about three-fourths of the entire nation. The ground has ceased to produce as of yore; it must be diligently worked for even a small return. No more free lands, and on all sides are indications that unceasing labor must in the near future be the price paid for existence. How beautifully the llitte hen looms up as a briliant background to this picture; she of all live-stock must play a most important part in future history.

Secretary T. E. Orr has mailed notice to members of the executive committee of the American Poultry Association that invitations from the following three different poultry associations have been received, asking that the 1906 meeting of the latter be held in connection with their shows, viz.: Denver, Colorado, Madison Square Garden, New York, and Cincinnati, Ohio. The dates of the Denver show have not been announced. The New York dates are January 2 to 6, and the Cincinnati show will be held January 16 to 21. The count of the vote will be made June 19, 1905.

Without in any way reflecting on the good intentions and well-meant invitations of the Denver and Cincinnati managers, we believe it for the best interests of the American Poultry Association that the next annual meeting should be held at New York, where the largest attendance of members can be secured. The work ahead is very important and will require the time and services of many of the older as well as newer members of the old society, members who are loyal and unselfish in their desires to see the American Poultry Association made into a national body with a standing and importance to the American Kennel and kindred clubs. The time is ripe for this thorough reorganization.

The New England Farm Stock Co. is a new enterprise, with headquarters at Greenfield, Mass., and officered by men prominent in live stock circles. Mr. Frank S. Peer, the well-known live-stock expert is the general manager. The object of the company is to place in the hands of laborers, farmers and poultrymen superior breeds of fowls at small cost or low rental, and to dispose of the eggs and increase of said sold or rented poultry for the best obtainable prices less five per cent commission for handling. The company gives the choice of three different options to suit the circumstances of those desiring to avail themselves of the opportunities offered. Brooders and coops will be furnished at cost to those desiring them. Advice will also be given free to beginners. One of the features is the selecting of imported stock by an expert, who makes trips to England and the continent in June of each year. It seems to us that this new venture should prove a success in more ways than one. The increase in the production of standard bred poultry alone is a valuable feature and with it hundreds of new fanciers will be created, many of whom never would have entered the fancy had they been compelled to start the business by buying the foundation stock. The fact that a first-class market is created at the same time is probably the most valuable feature of all.

With eggs down to seventeen cents a dozen in Eastern New York many farmers suddenly ceased selling and started preserving the fresh hen fruit. Last year the cold storage concerns got control of thousands of dozens of eggs; this year there is a change, for the farmer has learned his lesson and believes he can do just as well as the big trusts in corralling the egg supply, by pickling his own products by the water-glass method or paying for storing his crates in the cold storage plants. A number of country-store merchants are putting away crates of eggs in cold storage which will be nicely shipped and sold in late fall as fresh State products. The withdrawal of large numbers of fresh laid eggs had a tendency to jump the price a few cents, but hens are laying tremendously well in this section, most of the choice eggs on sale coming from the numerous small fanciers' plants. White Leghorn eggs are most numerous and bring one cent a dozen more at wholesale than tinted or brown eggs.

At the monthly meeting of the Adirondack Poultry Club, held May 17, at Johnstown, N. Y., committees were appointed to select a hall and judges for the Johnstown show to be held February, 1906. A committee was also appointed to arrange for the annual outing and clambake to take place at Cayodutra Park. Invitations have been extended to the Fulton County Poultry Association and other local organizations to be present at the fanciers' annual round-up of poultry fanciers.

Mr. John C. Jourey, whose Silver Wyandottes are famous in the United States and Canada for their open lacing in both males and females, last season was unfortunate in not being able to get a goodly number of early chicks, but this season reports unusual fertility of eggs and fine hatches. Even eggs shipped long distances have turned out in a number of instances a chick for each egg sent. We can hope to see a great lot of fine Silvers, even at the early shows, and what is handsomer than a well-laced and well-grown Silver Wyandotte?

What an opportunity now for a careful and patient fancier to produce a Silver Wyandotte Bantam! It will make a big hit when once bred to as fine a plumage as the modern Silver Wyandottes. The difficulty in breeding good males of the latter variety is gradually being overcome, and once it is completely mastered, this fine breed and its smaller counterpart will be among the most popular varieties in the long list of standard-bred poultry.

A recent letter from that Sterling old fancier, Mr. W. E. Samson, of Forest City, Pa., indicates a spirit of unrest on his part since he has been compelled to give up his Silver Wyandottes, owing to a change of residence. He longs for his once famous pets and expresses the hope that circumstances will conspire favorably so that he can again take up the breeding of his favorites and be an annual contender for blue ribbons at the big shows.

Our esteemed contemporary, Poultry, will remove from Freeport to Peotone, Ill., and will be within hailing distance of the great and only Windy City of Chicago. Editor Purvis, in announcing this change remarks, among other things: "Poultry Publishing Company will erect a fine building and install a modern printing plant at once, thus becoming the only poultry publication in the country owning and operating its own plant." How about The Feather, the American Fancier and the American Poultry Advocate? We believe they have and will be operated by publishers who own their own plants. We congratulate Poultry on its success in securing a permanent home and trust its future may be full of good fortune.

"The Columbian Wyandotte, a really fine and meritorious variety, that has been bred for many years, has not appeared through its sponsors for a place (in the Standard) on the Wyandotte's list. And it has just as good and even stronger claims to a place there than some of the favored ones now enrolled. We do honestly think and believe that Columbian Wyandotte breeders would do well in dropping the 'Wyandotte' and sticking to the Columbian. It is an American variety and a good one, and 'Columbian' is a good name to tie to." Now whom do you think we have quoted? Mr. Baerman, who thought it would be well to call the Rose Comb Rhode Island Reds by a shorter name and who concluded American Red would be 'a good name to tie to?' Not at all. It appears in the American Fancier and was probably written by Brother Drevenstedt, who absolutely refused to go on with the work of the committee of five because certain breeders of Rose Comb Rhode Island Reds thought as he does. We quote from him again to show what he thinks, or says he thinks: 'The mere duplication of varieties with only comb variations will soonor or later create confusion and destroy the real support and intent of the standard.' Certainly it will. That's what we have held ever since the American Reds came up for admission to the Standard. We are with you, brother, in this matter—if what you say is what you mean. To our mind, 'Columbian' is 'a good name to tie to.' Will you please explain why 'American' is not just as good? Please don't get funny now for we really want to know."

What "Brother Drevenstedt" did as member of the committee of five appears on the minutes of the Buffalo meeting. These minutes are in the possession of Secretary T. E. Orr, who is at liberty to hand them over to the executive committee at the next meeting of the American Poultry Association. We are not at liberty to make public a committee's re-

E. G. WYCKOFF

OUR readers have often heard of Mr. E. G. Wyckoff in many incidents of the poultry business. He is a breeder of fine fowls and a thorough fancier in every point of view, and those acquainted with him will vouch for this. He has an inward love for his birds and takes especial care in their breeding. Besides this branch of the business, he is the president of the Cornell Incubator Manufacturing Co., makers of Cornell incubators and the Peep-O-Day brooders, so generally known to poultrymen.

port. The latter belongs to the American Poultry Association. So we need not answer Brother Purvis concerning the American Red stand we took. As to the word "American," it is, of course, a good one, none better in this world. But there is a class in the Standard for varieties under the name "American," and it has been advisable to drop the prefix "American" from all the varieties coming under that head. That is why the word "American" was dropped from American Dominiques. This rule is carried through in other classes the prefixes Asiatic, English, French, etc., being dropped, in fact they were dropped many years ago. We trust that this explanation will convince our well-meaning friend out West that only the best of motives prevailed in dropping the word American. The word "Columbian" does not appear as a class and the breed bearing this name is American. It should find a place in the Standard, for it is justly entitled to it as far as breeding true to type and color is concerned. It is a destined variety, something that cannot be said of a few breeds admitted in the past.

Considerable improvement is being made in the Blue-laced Wyandottes over in England, some really beautiful-laced birds having been exhibited at a few shows recently. This is the same variety bred by Ira Keller under the name of Violettes. We believe it was Mr. Keller who sent the first pair to England some five years ago.

In a recent issue of Pigeons and Poultry, England, pictures of Mr. Dan Clayton, his residence and yards, appear, with an interesting article describing the latter. Mr. Clayton is well known to many of our Game Bantam fanciers on this side of the big pond. Many a fine winner has come from the peerless Clayton strain. It was thirty years ago that Dan Clayton started with Brown Red Games, but he soon found his real delight in the Brown Red Game Bantam and right from the start he became a leader, and for twenty years has never been beaten. As our contemporary expresses it: "Mr. C. likes to be master and as such he soon made his way to the top of this section of the fancy. When once there, he knows how to stop, and as he has reached the summit, of late has refrained from much exhibiting, so as to give all a chance. Most readers will remember his redoubtable teams at the Palace shows of three and four years back, when he cleared all before him, and we have no hesitation in saying that he could do the same today were he to take the least trouble. At the present time he likes to breed, and others to win, and only now and then does he put one in the show pen. Yet when this is done, it is with the same results as achieved at Paris. At the close of this show two of his exhibits sold for £100 ($500). While on the question of sales, we might mention that in another season he sold 31 birds for £310, or an average of £10 ($50) each. This is only one season, and quite in keeping with other periods for sales." The above gives a very fair idea what a true fancier can accomplish, and can serve as a model for some of our ambitious youngsters who are working to attain similar results. But they will have to spend the same amount of time and exercise the same care in mating, handling, breeding and exhibiting, and above all, keep the fancier above commercial greed, before they can travel in the same class with men of the Clayton stamp.

One of the keystones of success that has attended Mr. Clayton's efforts in his successful career is described by the writer in Poultry and Pigeons as follows: "Mr. Clayton does not believe in going for quantity, but for quality, consequently he has only four pens mated up. These have plenty of room and are all on grass runs. The first lot that we saw had the croquet lawn for to roam, and the head of this pen was the first international winner. He has grand reach, plenty of style, but a shade dark in color. He is what some would describe as a warm color, instead of the bright lemon, which is most desired. The hens with him have all been winners, among them the Otley gold medal winner. At the far end of the garden are three more breeding pens, though only two of these are occupied. In the first pen was a cock and six hens. The lord of the pen is considered to be the best-colored bird ever bred. Good quality, feather fine and clean, he is of a nice lemon shade throughout, and would make a grand copy to breed to. His mates are full of quality, and are all well bred from the right stock. The next run contained some more champion breeders, while the end one was empty. The houses on the place were all on the same pattern set up slightly off the ground, with a large, roosting section; the other part has a glass front with ventilation at the top, and plenty of peat moss to scratch and dust in. There was another thing that demanded my attention. On the floor of these scratching sections was always kept a good quantity of small maize. It is a generally accepted theory that all bantams must be fed sparingly, but as a set-off against that, here is a man who all through the winter allowed birds free access to maize. By this treatment, they never gorge themselves, yet can always find food, so that they are in better form for breeding than when they are fed sparingly. As the warm weather approaches, this is changed, and hand feeding is resorted to." Such is the simple common-sense method of England's most successful Game Bantam fanciers. The maize mentioned is the very small yellow flint corn raised in Canada and our Northern States, which is without a superior as a chicken food. Unfortunately, the past few years the crop has been very poor, and good small corn very high in price, and it was almost impossible to procure it.

The most interesting and valuable contribution to bantam literature that has appeared in recent years is the series of articles now being published in our English contemporary, the Feathered World. They are from the pen of R. Wiseman-Cunningham, M. D., and fortunately are accompanied by fifteen illustrations made from photographs and taken from living specimens, included among which are some of the famous Crystal Palace winners. The study of feathers and sections taken from the choicest living models is much more satisfactory than trying to follow some idealized drawings of the poultry artists. It seems more natural and real, and inspires a greater degree of confidence to both professional and amateur. As the author well remarks: "I feel, however, that mere writing will never satisfy those who are eager to receive accurate information, and for this reason I attach great importance to the photographic illustrations accompanying my article as showing what cannot be conveyed to the mind by mere words."

Regarding the Sebrights of present date compared with those of the past, Dr. Wiseman-Cunningham says: "If all that is written about the Sebright is true, Sir John Sebright's bantams were much nearer perfection than those of the present day. This I can not believe, for I doubt if fanciers a hundred years ago were as particular in their examinations and criticisms of Sebrights as we now are." In this country there are not a few who believe the Sebright of twenty years ago averaged better in correct and uniform lacing than do those of the present. We doubt this, although in the eighties, when Philander Williams, D. A. Nichols, H. J. Quietot, F. B. Zimmer, and other veterans were big factors in the Sebright alley, there was a greater evenness in the exhibits and shows were less numerous. Today, with a hundred exhibitions to a dozen twenty years ago, we meet many birds called Sebrights at some of the shows that are but apologies of what a fine Sebright should be. The tendency to give heavy-laced and long-bodied birds prizes caused much havoc in the Sebright ranks. At the larger shows, especially New York, Sebrights have been notably fine in quality, in the past ten years, McNeil, Andrus, Proper, Keller, Zimmer, Witmer and others contributing in many beautiful specimens correct in type, color and lacing. This applies especially to Silver Sebrights and in a lesser degree to the Goldens. The latter seem to still be on the large order and lack the fineness of the Silvers, although decided improvement in color has been noticeable, more golden-bay ground color and less of the faded yellow tan with better and more intense green to black lacing.

The origin of the Sebright Bantam is, according to Darwin, the result of a complicated cross. Dr. Wiseman-Cunningham more definitely states: "Gold and Silver Polands, Nankin and Rose-comb Bantams have all had something to do with their production. My own opinion is that gold and silver Polands and Nankin Bantams alone would produce the original Sebrights, and that Black and White Rosecombs were used afterward to try and improve the coloring and reduce the size. Inbreeding would improve and stamp the variety as a new breed to be relied on to reproduce its like. At the present day these are some strains of Sebrights that approach in likeness the golden Polands very closely, with neck and saddle hackle and a tail well furnished with long sickles; and there are only too many with white earlobes and black under tails, showing the black rose-comb cross. Any cross-breeding nowadays would ruin the breed."

The same writer is of the opinion that for purity of ground color the Scotch Sebright cannot be beaten, and it is very rare to find any creaminess in any part of the feathering of Silvers. The Scotch Golden Sebrights are also claimed to be more correct and even in color than English birds. Scotch judges encourage very finely laced Sebrights far too keenly, not attaching sufficient density of black. Mr. J. C. Preston, "King of Sebright Breeders," once said: "A Sebright is a bird of feather properties, of which color is of the first importance. All other properties must be considered as secondary." This is no doubt in the main correct, but judging by the remarks made by some American judges, we believe it to be a trifle dangerous to give this advice unlimited approval. We remember discussing several Sebright sketches with a well-known judge a number of weeks ago. This judge seemed to find fault with the shape and thought the Sebright he knew and bred years ago was a long-bodied bird. But the lacing, as a rule, filled his eye completely and that is where it generally ends. Shape is too often sacrificed, and all this talk that the ideal shape cannot be obtained is not borne out by facts. Birds have been imported into, and also bred in this country that approached very closely to the ideal. The description given by Dr. Cunningham of shape is clear and shows that fanciers on the other side are "after the type." This is what he says: "In shape the Sebright is cobby all over, and in carriage quite distinct from any other breed of Bantam. The head is carried well back, the breast very prominent, showing the lacing on the feathers distinctly from the throat right down the thighs. The tail is well carried over the back, almost touching the back of the head, well spread out, showing every feather, resembling very much the carriage of a Fantail pigeon. He is a vain little bird."

The modern Sebright should have every feather in the tail well laced, at least in the first year. Mr. J. C. Preston is credited with producing the most perfectly-laced tails seen on Silver Sebrights for many years past. His first and challenge cup Crystal Palace pullet, 1904, was perfect in this respect and his first cockerel at the same exhibition equally good. In looking at photo-engravings of these two birds we confess a desire to own them, for these properties alone, although the wing lacing, bow and secondaries are almost equally fine.

In judging Sebrights, great care must be taken to examine the specimens most thoroughly. They cannot be judged in the coop; they must be handled. The feathers must be pure white with a very narrow lacing of greenish-black, and not a gray so common in many narrow-laced birds. To be brief the bird should have feathers on throat, neck, back tail wings and breast that are laced all around. White caps, white bibs around throat and white wing fronts or shoulders are defects that often kill the chances of an otherwise finely-laced bird of wearing the coveted blue.
